"I thought we were very undisciplined for a good portion of the match," Fritz said. "We blocked well for half a game in game one, and from that point forward we obviously didn't have any answer for Kelly Johnson, who had almost 50 percent of their offense. So I think she single-handedly pretty much won that match for them. And then there was our inability to receive serves and missed serves."

In a losing effort for K-State, junior outside hitter Agata Rezende had 16 kills on .406 hitting, senior middle blocker Lisa Martin had 15 kills on .464 hitting and freshman libero Angie Lastra had 22 digs. Seniors outside hitter Vali Hejjas and setter Gabby Guerre each had double-doubles – Hejjas with 17 kills and 16 digs and Guerre with 53 assists and 11 digs.

Guerre said the Wildcats' implosion resulted from mental setbacks and underestimating a good Texas Tech squad.

"I think we just lost a lot of our focus if not all of our focus and didn't respect them," Guerre said. "They're a really good team. They didn't have anything to lose, and they came out and played hard and we didn't respect that."

The Wildcats will look to turn things around on Wednesday when they travel to College Station, Texas for a match against Texas A&M.

Men's basketball team prevails over Bison after sluggish 1st half

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though they got the win, Friday night's game against North Dakota State was not the way the men's basketball players wanted to open the season.

After trailing at the half, K-State used a 14-1 run midway through the second half to defeat the Bison 70-61 at Bramlage Coliseum.

But following the game, Coach Jim Wooldridge said he was far from pleased.

"The story was how well they played together and how dysfunctional we played together," Wooldridge said.

North Dakota State – a squad currently making the transition for Division-II to Division-I basketball – out-shot and outrebounded the Wildcats in the first half and took a 29-23 lead into the break.

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey said the team was ashamed of its performance in the first game of the season.

"Yeah we're pretty embarrassed," Massey said. "We came out again and thought, 'these guys are going to be slouches', and that's a bad habit we've got to get rid of. We've got to come out and play ball every night."

After shooting 24 percent from the field in the first half, the Wildcats were able to find more of a rhythm in half No. 2, shooting 50 percent from the field and 5-for-8 on 3-pointers.

K-State took the lead for good on the 14-1 run, in which Massey scored six of his game-high 21 points and freshman guard Clent Stewart made a three and a jaw-dropping assist to sophomore forward Cartier Martin.

Stewart finished the game with eight points and five assists to just one turnover.

Wooldridge praised Stewart's performance in his first regular season game in a Wildcat uniform.

"Clent never takes possessions off, and he always stays within the confines of the system," Wooldridge said. "He's a very disciplined young player. His contribution to the game was he was a very solid defender for us, and then in the second half, he found some big shots."

The Wildcats not only improved their shooting in the second half, but their work on the boards, finishing the contest with a 44-31 rebounding advantage.

"They read off the stats to us in the locker room (at halftime), and we knew we had to pick it up," said Massey, who also grabbed a game-high 10 rebounds.

The Wildcats now prepare for a 7 p.m. game on Wednesday against Denver at Bramlage Coliseum.

Wooldridge said the key for K-State to avoid more sluggish performances like Friday night is playing as a team.

"It's an area we've covered with our guys, certainly as we left the Pittsburg State exhibition game," Wooldridge said. "We tried to hammer that point home and obviously did not get it done."

"Hopefully, this game will be a teaching tool for us, and we'll be able to function better as a team next time out."

Injury update

Senior forward Dramane Diarra is out indefinitely after re-fracturing his ankle in practice last week, Coach Jim Wooldridge said on Friday.

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey gets around North Dakota State's Andy Kelchen to make a jump shot at Friday's game. Massey had 21 points and 10 rebounds during the game.

Thank you, Jack Connaughton, for "sparing" your time to help K-State students, faculty and staff steer clear of the "gutter" during Union events. We wish you a turkey-filled Thanksgiving holiday!

FEATURE | Family works toward mutual goals

months later, and she met Ted at his funeral, she said. Ted, 32, who is a freshman in construction science, worked her uncle, who was a contractor for the government.

Ted said he came to Manhattan, because the company he worked for was hired to work at Fort Riley.

"I wanted to go back to school, and we picked up a contract at Fort Riley, so I came along," he said.

Ted is taking 12 hours of school and owns a business called Johnson's Contracting, he said.

Having his own business allows him to be more flexible, so he can go to school and to the hospital for Jordin when they need to.

"We've been stuck at the hospital for months at a time," he said. "If it hadn't been for that, I would've worked for someone else. I'd have been afraid to start my own business, but when you don't have a choice, it makes it a little easier."

Aubrey doesn't work, but she is taking 14 hours, she said.

Two nurses come in during the week to help out with Jordin, and one comes in during the weekend, Ted and Aubrey said.

"We can't have a regular babysitter," Ted said. "She's been known to turn blue and stop breathing. Your average 14-year-old would freak out."

Aubrey said Jordin needs special care. She has to be fed through a tube that goes into her stomach and breaths through a tube in her neck that goes to her trachea.

Jordin is just now starting to sit up. She can't walk or talk, which she may never be able to do, Aubrey said.

"It's very common for them not to walk, not to talk or crawl," she said. "Not that she won't be able to, but most of them don't."

Aubrey said, although she won't have any more children, she is very fortunate to have Jordin, otherwise she may have not gotten her high school degree.

"Really, I owe this all to my daughter," she said.

usually want people with at least high school degrees.

Necole Grace, freshman in apparel marketing and design, said she heard about Open Door, because her cousin went through it. Grace dropped out of her junior year of high school after she became pregnant with her daughter, Auvyana, 3.

It took her about six months to go through the program, she said. She finished in May 2004.

"It was a good program, and it taught me a lot," she said. "At the same time, it taught me how to use computers, because I didn't know really how before."

"I thank God they had it. I know that."

SOCIAL SECURITY | Sensitive data available in public records, but officials take steps to help prevent abuse names," Wickstrum said.

Local court systems were not the only offices in which the GAO found visible Social Security numbers on public records.

Access to Social Security numbers was also found in local law enforcement records. Nine percent of law enforcement agencies surveyed said records with Social Security numbers were available to the public.

Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department said technically the public could access the private information, but it was unlikely there would be widespread abuse.

To access RCPD reports that are available to the public, one must show up in person at the RCPD, identify themselves and their purpose for seeing the report and sign for it, Moldrup said.

"It would be risky to come here and try to abuse it," he said.

Usually, only lawyers and those involved with a particular case request access to RCPD reports, Moldrup said.

Though often times Social Security numbers are necessary for identification purposes, the GAO report found numerous government agencies had no need for Social Security numbers.

The GAO estimated that Social Security numbers were not essential for 25-51 percent of those surveyed.

Moldrup said Social Security numbers usually do not have any use in RCPD reports.

"I don't really see a need for having that on there, except when it's pertinent," Moldrup said.

In light of concerns over abuse, several states have recently enacted legislation restricting public disclosure of Social Security numbers. Eight states – Florida, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oregon, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia – have put such legislation in effect since 2002.

Legislative initiatives have yet to make their way to Kansas, but Moldrup said his department is taking action on its own.

Moldrup said the department is encouraging its officers to avoid obtaining Social Security information, and if officers do record a Social Security number, they can file it somewhere else than page one of the report – the page accessible to the public.

"We're starting to discourage officers from filling out that space (on the report) unless it's pertinent for the case," Moldrup said.

trying to make sure no one responds to the email, Tetrault said.

"The best way to stop this sort of thing is to make it to where nobody responds," she said.

Tetrault said Commerce would never ask form account information through email.

"We don't need to use this type of communication," she said. "The reason we don't use it is because it's not secure."

Tom Giller, Manhattan Commerce Bank president, said many people have called asking about the emails, and sometimes they are not Commerce customers. Some people, though, have fallen victim to the scam.

"We've had a small handful of people respond," he said. "Basically we tell those people to come in and close their account."

"A vast majority of the people are calling us asking about it."

K-State student killed in car accident

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State Salina student was killed Saturday afternoon in a car accident in Olathe, Kan.

Eric Richards, 21, and passenger John Fulbright, 21 of Overland Park, Kan., were killed.

Richards was a senior in mechanical engineering. He spent two years on the Manhattan campus before transferring to K-State-Salina this fall.

A press release from the Olathe Police Department said Richards' 1993 Mazda RX-7 lost control and struck a utility pole. Officers responded to the accident at 12:17 a.m. Sunday.

The accident is under investigation.

Dennis Kuhlman, dean of the College of Technology and Aviation, said Richards' death will be mourned by both students and faculty.

"Being a small campus, anything like this that happens has a tremendous impact. We all know each other and the student body; any type of death will naturally impact friends and faculty members," Kuhlman said.

Kuhlman said the Salina campus has the motto 'you had better know the professor, because they will know you.' He said this will ring true in facing Richards' death.

"We always take our students as No. 1. We have a complete protocol in handling these issues. We will first let the students and classmates know there is counseling available for anyone who needs or wants it," Kuhlman said.

No campus memorial service has been scheduled, but Kuhlman said the decision is ultimately left to family and students to have a service.

"In the past, we have done those. We have numerous trees and benches that have been dedicated on campus; we have to remember the impact they've made on campus," Kuhlman said.

Colin Crume, junior in political science, is Richards' former roommate and said he will always remember Richards' ability to make him smile.

"Eric was the kind of friend that you wish you always had around," he said.

"He could make you laugh no matter how angry or upset you may have been. Even as I am experiencing this pain, I can't help but smile when I think about him."

Meth lab found in Manhattan

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department discovered a methamphetamine lab Tuesday in Manhattan.

At 8:35 p.m., RCPD officers along with the Kansas Bureau of Investigation executed a search warrant at 215 Ridge Dr., north apartment, after neighbors complained of a strange odor.

Officers found a meth lab in the laundry room of the complex, according to a RCPD press release. The Manhattan Fire Department also responded and evacuated the building because of the high risk of explosion.

Amanda D. Bluthardt, 24, was arrested for manufacturing methamphetamine, possession of methamphetamine, possession of chemicals used to manufacture, possession of drug paraphernalia and possession of marijuana. Bond was set at $20,000.

Officers seized a boxed meth lab with produced methamphetamine, drug paraphernalia and marijuana.

It was turned over to the Kansas Department of Health and Environment for destruction.

Holiday parade to welcome season tonight

By Jeremy Deutenhahn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It may be dark outside, but the Mayor's Lighted Holiday Parade will light up the streets today.

The parade will begin at 5:30 p.m. today on Poyntz Avenue in front of Manhattan Town Center and will end in Aggieville.

Lisa Rockley, parade coordinator and executive director of Downtown Manhattan, Inc., said they are expecting a larger crowd than last year.

"People should come out because it will be a fun time," Rockley said. "We have church groups, different high school bands, delegates from the state of Kansas, City Commissioners and floats from different community groups."

Rockley said all participants in the parade must display lights.

"All entries must have lights, even walking groups. Some people just wrap lights around themselves and walk in the parade."

The parade will end with the lighting of the Mayor's Christmas tree in Triangle Park.

Cold weather finally arrives this week

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the holiday season rolls around, winter-coat weather can be expected.

Until last week, though, the weather wasn't cold enough to bring out many winter coats.

But regardless of the actual weather conditions, many buildings in Manhattan are already decorated for Christmas.

Jerrad Boyle, junior in architectural engineering, helped put up lights Sunday evening on his fraternity house, Theta Xi.

He started to help just after he returned from his home in Dallas, Texas, and he said he noticed the cold right away.

"I just came back from about 30 degrees warmer," he said. "I'm just glad it didn't snow on my way back."

Boyle said Theta Xi started decorating Sunday morning on the inside and out. He was putting up lights on the outside, because he had helped his dad, who owns a business that puts up Christmas decorations.

"I've done this before, so I

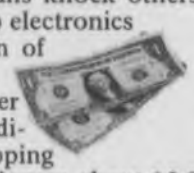
WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Holiday spending up 10 percent on Black Friday



Keith Thompson hauls two carts full of toys Friday for his four sons along the aisles of Toys R Us. Like many shoppers, Thompson said he was planning to spend more this year than previously. Thompson was up at 4:30 a.m. in preparation to get to the stores.

SAN ANTONIO EXPRESS-NEWS

Staff and wire reports

It's the most wonderful time of the year – when millions of Americans knock others out of the way to get cheap electronics and clothes in celebration of the birth of Christ.

Black Friday, the day after Thanksgiving that is traditionally the busiest shopping day of the year, saw spending up about 10.8 percent from 2003. However, many retailers, including Wal-Mart, will not announce sales until November figures are finalized this week.

Despite the projected increase, some experts raised concern about consumer spending, because Wal-Mart lowered its November sales projections.

INTEL REFORM

Bipartisan support of intelligence reforms recommended by the 9/11 Commission has not been enough to pass the intelligence bill that would consolidate authority over U.S. intelligence operations.

Chairman Duncan Hunter of the House Armed Services Committee is standing firmly against the bill, because, he said, parts of the bill could endanger lives of soldiers.

The bill would give the power to analyze satellite images to a national intelligence director, taking the power away from the Pentagon. Hunter and others said the information should stay with the Pentagon in order to better prepare troop movement and defenses.

THANKSGIVING

Students took a five-day weekend to celebrate the peace between the Pilgrims and Native Americans. Just as in the 17th century, families gathered around televisions to watch the Detroit Lions lose.

Classes resume today, and continue through Dec. 10. Finals week begins Dec. 13.

HELPING HANDS

More than 1,000 people enjoyed a Thanksgiving dinner from the Flinthills Breadbasket on Thursday at Manhattan High School's East Campus.

The community dinner was one of the largest in Manhattan history, with about 120 volunteers working to prepare and serve the meals.

MEDICAL MARIJUANA

The Supreme Court will roll into discussions about medicinal marijuana this week.

Eleven states have passed laws that allow for the use of marijuana for medicinal purposes, despite federal laws outlawing the drug.

The court will decide whether these states can continue to allow such use, and whether federal agents can arrest those who use the drug under state law.

The Bush administration has made it clear that it believes the drug has no medical value.

BUSH ASSASSINATION THREAT

A Colombian rebel group reportedly had issued a call for the assassination of President Bush during his trip there last week.

Bush

The Revolutionary Armed Forces of Columbia allegedly put out the call, but Colombia's defense minister said there was no evidence any attempt was organized, and U.S. officials said the president's life was not in danger.

About 15,000 Colombian troops and police, along with the Secret Service, were on full alert during Bush's visit.

IRAQ UPDATE AND ELECTIONS

The Iraqi elections must continue as scheduled, or the terrorists will win, the country's deputy prime minister said last week.

The elections are planned for January, and Deputy Prime Minister Barham Saleh said it will be a great challenge for them to be held despite widespread violence in the country.

In efforts to slow the violence, U.S. and Iraqi forces arrested 43 suspected insurgents in the northern city of Mosul.

Terrorism threatens Iraqi elections

Leader says following January timeline could be a challenge

By Maggie Michael
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Iraq's most feared terror group claimed responsibility Sunday for slaughtering members of the Iraqi security forces in Mosul, where dozens of bodies have been found. The claim raises fears the terror group has expanded to the north after the loss of its purported base in Fallujah.

Meanwhile, insurgents attacked U.S. and Iraqi targets in Baghdad and in Sunni Arab areas.

Iraq's deputy prime minister, Barham Saleh, said sticking to the Jan. 30 election timetable would be a challenge, but delaying it would bolster the insurgents' cause.

In London, Saleh said delaying the election would have "serious ramifications to the political process" and would bolster the insurgents' cause.

"Sticking to that timetable will be difficult, will be a serious challenge," he told the British Broadcasting Corp. "But delaying elections will be much more difficult because it will have serious ramifications to the political process, to the issue of legitimacy, and surely all of us do not want to give the terrorists the slightest of technical wins in that situation."

Two U.S. soldiers were injured in a Baghdad attack, and another American soldier died in a traffic accident north of the capital, the military said. The two U.S. soldiers were injured early Sunday when a car bomb exploded next to their convoy on the road leading to Baghdad's airport, a military statement said.

The interim government's Youth Ministry reported that its general director, Ahmed Faiq, and his bodyguard were injured in the attack. The highway leading from downtown to the international airport is considered one of the most dangerous stretches of road in Iraq.

Seventeen suspected insurgents were killed in clashes with U.S., British and Iraqi forces in Latifiyah and Mahmoudiya, where multinational forces launched an offensive last week, Iraqi police spokesman Capt. Hadi Hatef said.

Elsewhere, a car bomb killed six people and injured five others in Samarra, 60 miles north of Baghdad. The blast occurred as a minibus drove past a school, police Maj. Qahtan Mohammed said. All the casualties were passengers in the minibus, he said.

An Iraqi street trader prepares food Sunday under a campaign poster of Shiite cleric Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Sistani to encourage people to vote in Iraq's upcoming elections in Baghdad.

U.S. and Iraqi troops regained control of Samarra from insurgents during military operations in September but the city remains uneasy.

U.S. and Iraqi forces killed 17 suspected insurgents in raids south of the capital Sunday, Iraqi police said. Operations there included a dawn speedboat assault by U.S. Marines and British and Iraqi troops on suspected insurgent hideouts along the Euphrates River, British media reported.

A statement posted on an Islamist Web site in the name of al-Qaida in Iraq, led by Jordanian terror mastermind Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, claimed responsibility for killing 17 members of Iraq's security forces and a Kurdish militiaman in Mosul, where insurgents rose up this month in support of guerrillas facing a U.S.-led assault in Fallujah.

The claim could not be independently verified but the style of writing appeared similar to other statements by al-Zarqawi's group, which is responsible for numerous car bombings and beheadings of foreign hostages in Iraq.

The United States has offered a $25 million reward for al-Zarqawi's capture – the same amount it is offering for Osama bin Laden.

At least 50 people have been killed in Mosul in the past 10 days. Most of the victims are believed to have been supporters of Iraq's interim government or members of its fledgling security forces.

Separately, al-Zarqawi's group claimed it detonated a car bomb near a U.S. military convoy in the Hamam al-Alil area, near Mosul. It said the blast destroyed an armored vehicle and damaged another.

Although the claims were not verifiable, they raised fears that al-Zarqawi's organization had spread to Mosul, Iraq's third-largest city, 225 miles north of Baghdad.

New program allows user to gauge alcohol intake

K-State students can now assess their relationship with alcohol by using the e-CHUG program.

Bill Arck, director of alcohol and other drug education services at University Counseling Services, said K-State students have free online access to the Electronic Check-Up to Go program, which is a brief assessment and feedback tool.

He said e-CHUG is already in use at 103 universities across 23 states and is designed to motivate students to examine their alcoholic consumption using personalized information about their own drinking habits and risk factors.

The assessment is completely anonymous and takes students six to seven minutes to complete. It does not require face-to-face time with a counselor, he said.

Students are prompted to enter some demographic information and some information on their use of alcohol after which they submit the form online to receive immediate personalized feedback, Arck said.

The feedback is drawn from national surveys on college students, a K-State survey and other risk measures, he said.

The e-CHUG program is entirely voluntary and participants have the right to withdraw at any time. Also, since the e-CHUG asks no questions which can be used to identify the student, confidentiality is maintained, he said.

Students after the e-CHUG program can decide to visit with a professional consultant if needed by calling 532-6927 and asking to talk to someone in the Alcohol and Other Drug Education service office.

"It is a health education and risk appraisal tool that can help increase people's awareness of their alcohol-use behaviors, their risk of physical and financial harm associated with their level of alcohol use, and the alcohol and drug counseling resources available to students at K-State," said Doug Newton, assistant professor of kinesiology, who helped design the program.

Fort Riley officials lead annual toy drive

By Caleb Amyot
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Santa will be making a few more stops this year, and children ages 16 and under from less fortunate homes will have something to look forward to this holiday season.

Staff Sgt. Marcos Fedlan of the 24th Infantry Division at Fort Riley seemed optimistic about this year's Operation Santa Claus, a toy and monetary charity for needy families across Kansas.

Operation Santa Claus is sponsored by the Non-Commissioned Officer Association, and it is in its 36th year.

The charity/toy drive raised $51,000 for families in need during the 2003 holiday season.

"Hopefully we (can) make what we did last year," Fedlan said.

The NCO delivers toys as far as Emporia and as close as Riley County, Fedlan said. Among some of the larger recipients of the charity's toy donations are the Big Brother/ Big Sister and Families Together organizations.

Families who participate in the program must fill out a standard request form. Registration and gift "drop-boxes" can be found at the Manhattan Wal-Mart and Alco store locations. The coordinators of the program request that all toys donated at the drop boxes are in new condition.

Registration can also be completed by requesting a form by e-mailing opsanta@riley.army.mil.

Although toys are the primary means of donation, monetary gifts are welcomed. Monetary donations are accepted by the charity, but no funds are given to families for their own disposal.

Operation Santa Claus will run until January 14, 2005, at which time the program will have reached its third month of operation.

TO THE POINT

United Nations officials should take initiative in Iraq elections

Iraq elections must be executed by the Jan. 30 deadline or Iraq will become an even bigger problem within the international community.

International officials agree that delaying elections would only create further unrest and less hope for the future of the country.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

As U.S. military officials and the Iraqi security force were arresting insurgents this weekend, Iraq's deputy prime minister, Barham Saleh, said delaying elections would only bolster the insurgents' cause.

At the same time, an illegitimate election would only give a false sense of democracy in a war-torn nation that has none nothing else but illegitimacy.

It's time for the United Nations to take initiative and secure world order.

While they might disagree with the U.S. action, help is needed.

The U.S. military must do its part and focus on creating secure polling places so that the UN can send a team to train local officials in conducting fair elections.

There isn't much time left.

The most important thing is that democracy prevails, not who took the right actions to begin with.

Altaf Karim and Chaz Steimel clash over cheap drugs imported from Canada.

Thou shall or shall not?

Supreme Court decision could decide fate of 10 Commandments

JONAS HOGG

Those who know me will tell you that I'm as pious as the next unmarried guy who lives with his girlfriend. My religion doesn't even get a box on surveys.

Nevertheless, however obscure or how mainstream your faith may be, it is protected under the umbrella of the first amendment. Freedom of religion is among the foremost things mentioned in the Bill of Rights, its purpose is to ensure that the government will never promote nor restrict a certain religion, so that the people are free to choose their own.

But I find myself continually appalled at the average schmo's grasp of what freedom really is. One thing that freedom certainly is not is the banning of things disagreeable; especially not things disagreeable to you.

As the age of the ninny enters full swing we find ourselves increasingly convinced that the the greatest way to ensure liberty is to ban anything that could possibly be construed as offensive.

Leading the charge against all things unsavory is the ACLU and other self-proclaimed experts who have decided that the ten commandments are too egregious an insult to the average man to be placed in a public courtroom.

This is all done under the guise of separation of church and state, a theory which worked in this nation for many years before everyone started getting hangnails over people actually being religious.

There were almost two full centuries for religion to become embedded in this country.

Obviously, if officials are using personal faith rather than law as the fulcrum of their authority then there is a problem. The solution to this problem is not an outright banning of all things symbolic.

What your friendly neighborhood Marxist who wants all religion gone from society doesn't quite realize is that it is all around us, both subtle and overt.

For example, while there was a furor over a tiny cross in the seal of a city who's name means "The Angels," what was hardly noticed was the much larger representation of the goddess Pomona. There has been no opposition to the Statue of Liberty, who was, herself, modeled after a goddess; nor lady justice, who adorns courtrooms around the nation, who is also, you guessed it, a goddess.

We can also choose to ignore that the ACLU has not lifted a finger over the Muslim call to prayer being broadcast in Hamtramck, Mich.

Ask yourself, what is more invasive, a hunk of granite concealed in a building, or a loudspeaker that carries over several miles broadcasting five times a day? Don't the two deserve similar treatment?

But, the light brigade fails to realize that religion is part of our culture, and thankfully so at that. Trying to strip it away is only going to polarize our society.

Ultimately, people need to wake up and realize what the freedom of religion means: letting people do their thing while they let you do yours.

Freedom of religion means your neighbor allows you to put up a cross in your yard, and you allow him to put up an upside down cross in his own yard, and even light it on fire if he has the burn permit. Once your neighbor has rights taken away, it's only a matter of time before yours are gone too.

We must realize that religion at its most basic level is thought, and without freedom of thought there can be no other freedoms. When the courts begin to tell us where we are allowed to express our thoughts, all other freedoms are null and void.

JEREMY PARKER

For the first time in 25 years, the Supreme Court has decided it will tackle the issue of the Ten Commandments being displayed on government property.

It's a bitter debate that the court tried to brush under the rug for a quarter century, but much like my undying love for Def Leppard, it just won't go away.

On one side, you've got your church and state seperationists, who are perfectly content with the government not forcing its citizens to acknowledge their own personal religious beliefs through jumbo monoliths.

On the other side...not so much.

For example, remember last year's fiasco in Alabama? When the Alabama Judicial Ethics Panel demanded that Judge Roy Moore remove the commandments from his courthouse, Moore refused and was removed from office.

Conservatives everywhere flipped their wigs and rallied around Moore (because apparently, "activist judges" are only bad if they're liberal).

The arguments of Moore's supporters were nothing new, and nothing convincing, either.

Like everyone else on that side of the fence, most claimed that they weren't religiously motivated, they just wanted the commandments there because of their historical significance.

"After all," they said, "our country was founded on these principles, and our laws are based on them."

Oh, really? Let's take a quick look at the Ten Commandments, and how hugely they impact our laws.

1. "Have no other Gods" (not a law).
2. "Don't use the Lord's name in vain" (not a law).
3. "No false idols" (not a law).
4. "Keep the Sabbath holy" (not a law).
5. "Honor thy Father and Mother" (not a law).
6. "No murderin'" (a law).
7. "No adultery" (not a law).
8. "Don't steal" (a law).
9. "Don't lie" (not a law).
10."Don't covet" (not a law).

So as you can see, a whopping 20 percent of our laws are based on the Ten Commandments, which even pales in comparison to Shaquille O'Neal's free throw average.

It's quite obvious that the "our country was founded on these principles" argument is code for, "hurry up and convert to my religion," because otherwise, they'd be more consistent.

After all, our country was also founded on the idea that a woman's role is nothing more than a baby machine and dishwasher, but are these people chaining their wives in the kitchen? Oh, and there's also that whole "slavery" thing that also kinda played a huge part in our country's foundation.

If you think the commandments should be on display because "our country was founded on it," you'd also better advocate slavery and submissive roles for women. No picking and choosing will be allowed.

I'm not denying that Christianity was important to the founding fathers and the formation of this country. But let's not forget that it was just as important that the government make no establishment of religion.

It's true that the phrase "separation of church and state" doesn't explicitly appear in the Constitution, but it was still an important philosophy that was imperative in ensuring that our government can't tell us who to worship.

Frankly, maintaining a separation of church and state is more important now than ever (thanks to four more years of Jesus McGod in the White House).

This country would be a lot better off if the government operated like an agnostic: not denying any religion, but not confirming one, either.

When the Ten Commandments reside on government property, it passes the point of being merely a historical document. It becomes an undeniable endorsement of one particular religion over another.

Keeping church and state separate is nothing to be afraid of.

What should really scare us is a government endorsement of one religion over another.

Musical recipe

The Mathematics mix ingredients to create dynamic performance, fun for audiences

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Forming a band is akin to developing a new recipe for spaghetti sauce.

Ingredients are added, mixed and matched until just the right flavor and zest are achieved.

The Mathematics have found this zest and want to pass it around for all to share, said Seven "Sergeant Rock" Black, bassist for the band.

"Our music is for us, but we also do it for the fans as well," he said. "I think every band wants that."

The ingredients come from a wide range of backgrounds, including Seattle and Manhattan.

"Duke (Derek Macy) and I came from another band in Seattle, the Cuckoo's, and formed the band half assembled," Black said. "Then our first drummer got pregnant and Hope came in and Roddy joined us from Helios Creed."

Just as tomato paste, onions and basil combine to form a singular sauce, the name Mathematics also suggests the integration of arithmetic and music in life, said Derek "Duke Fame" Macy, vocalist for the band.

"Music and life are mathematics, it's (math) an integral part of everything, he said." I was having a conversation with Seven one day and thought, 'man, this is a great name for a band.'"

Not only is the name suggestive of a multitude of ingredients, songwriting can be a complicated or spontaneous process, where an instantaneous stroke of creativity can bring a good song, said guitarist Roddy "Ramrod" Hugunin.

"My songs either take months or minutes, its either a long battle or a quick push," he said. "I'll just sit down and play around on the guitar, and sometimes a great riff will just reveal itself."

Sometimes a song will lie dormant and unfinished for months on end, waiting for that stroke of brilliance to tie it all together, Macy said.

"The tape recorder has really become an essential tool, and it's good to record when you're just messing around," he said. "You think of something and can share it with other people, or you can patch other songs together that haven't been finished."

Their name is traveling long distances as well, Macy said.

"We've had offers to play at CBGB's in New York, and also in Oslo, Norway," he said.

"We're also booking shows in Kansas City, Lawrence and Wichita, and we think there's a good chance we'll be invited to play at the South by Southwest music festival."

Their style of music allows the Mathematics to have a lot of fun during their shows, and that translates into a fun time for the audience.

"Sixties garage rock is one of out major influences," Macy said. "Bands like the Kinks and the Hollies that are what rock 'n' roll is all about."

Thus, it is the music and the fans that drive the Mathematics toward their goal of excellence. But Macy said their shows aren't just about the music.

"We don't necessarily consider ourselves so much as regular musicians, that has kind of a dull connotation," he said.

"We like to think that we're more performers, and try to give the audience a solid block of entertainment, both visually and musically."

Boy, girl for Roberts

It's a girl — and a boy — for actress Julia Roberts and her husband, cinematographer Danny Moder.

Roberts gave birth to twins Hazel Patricia Moder and Phinnaeus Walter Moder on Sunday morning at a Southern California hospital, publicist Marcy Engelman said Sunday.

Roberts, 37, was confined to bed last month after experiencing a series of early contractions and wasn't due until early January. Engelman said Sunday in a phone interview that "mother and babies are doing great," but didn't release the twins' weights or other details.

Agent says Pink Floyd's chorus owed royalties

Members of the children's chorus who sang on Pink Floyd's anti-authoritarian 1979 hit, "Another Brick in the Wall," are owed thousands of dollars in payment, a royalties agent said.

Peter Rowan said he was representing one of the group, Peter Thorpe, in a bid for unpaid royalties. Rowan said he hoped other members of the group would join the claim for royalties from a fund set up in 1997 to compensate session musicians.

Two dozen students from Islington Green School in north London sang on the chart-topping track from the album "The Wall," which was recorded at a nearby studio in 1979.

The school received a platinum disc and a payment in return for the children's efforts, but the pupils weren't paid.

"The Wall" has sold more than 23 million copies and is the third best-selling album of all time, according to the Recording Industry Association of America.

Poison's Bret Michaels' stolen guitar resurfaces

A custom-made guitar owned by former Poison lead singer Bret Michaels resurfaced a week after it was stolen during an Indiana concert.

The guitar, worth about $3,000, was returned to staff at WLUP 97.9 FM in Chicago late last week.

The red-and-white Holden six-string electric guitar with a picture of a skull wearing a top hat was taken Nov. 12 after a concert at a bar in South Haven.

Someone anonymously delivered the guitar to a Chicago nightclub where the radio station was to host a promotional event last Thursday.

After the Indiana concert, a photo of Michaels with the guitar was posted on the 41-year-old singer's Web site with the message:

"We are asking anyone and everyone who may know where it is to please return it to us. This guitar has a lot of sentimental value to Bret, and we just want to get it back."

'National Treasure' film combines humor, suspense

"National Treasure"
Movie review by J. Scott Bowman

There's a treasure somewhere in America and the map is hidden on the back of the...Declaration of Independence?

Despite the somewhat unbelievable premise of "National Treasure," the movie is actually quite good.

Benjamin Franklin Gates (Nicolas Cage) is a third generation treasure hunter. His family has been searching for an unthinkable treasure that has spanned time and continents.

Clue after clue, which all are embedded in American history, Gates realizes that in order to protect the incredible treasure from the heartless Ian Howe (Sean Bean), he must steal the Declaration of Independence.

"National Treasure" is a fast-paced adventure saturated in history from beginning to end, reminiscent of Indiana Jones movies.

The plot to "National Treasure" seemed to parallel Dan Brown's hit book "The Da Vinci Code" on a number of levels (the historically saturated clues, a brilliant woman and man working together to find the treasure, etc.), but it was still an intriguing story.

Cage was a believable nerd searching for treasure, though when he was trying to be intellectual, he seemed to come off as annoying.

Bean plays his typical role of a gruff bad guy hellbent on getting what he wants, and Agent Sadusky (Harvey Keitel) is hot on the trail of both Gates and Howe.

Diane Kruger is the stunning Dr. Abigail Chase who is one of the key figures in the National Archives, where the Declaration is stored.

She finds Gates' story unbelievable and is shocked when she finds out that the document has been stolen by Gates, and eventually helps for the cause of finding the treasure.

The movie has plenty of suspense to keep you guessing and plenty of humor to keep the mood fun.

Most of the humor comes from Riley Poole (Justin Bartha) who is Gates' friend and technologically-sound partner in crime. They also tend to poke fun at their own premise by playing off the hard-to-believe story of a treasure map on the back of the Declaration.

Gates' father, Patrick Henry Gates (Jon Voight), plays the grumpy father who wants his son to stop wasting his time and live his life. Though Voight is a great actor and did a decent job, his character seems sort of trite and annoying.

All in all, "National Treasure" is an entertaining movie. The plot, though tailored for American history, is somewhat original, but some of the characters are a little lacking and tend to be trite.

K-State trackster named All-America athlete

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Mathew Chesang crossed the finish line at the NCAA Cross Country Championships on Nov. 22, he instantly became a part of Wildcat history.

With the senior's 12th-place finish in a time of 31:11, Chesang became an All-American – K-State's first since Francis O'Neill in 1992. It was the highest finish at the NCAA meet by a Wildcat runner since Jerome Howe finished 11th in 1971.

Coach Michael Smith said there were not many words to describe Chesang's race.

"He is just a great competitor and a very gutsy kid," Smith said. "I don't know what other superlatives I can throw out there. That was one of the toughest performances I've seen from a K-State kid."

Chesang

From the start, Chesang ran with the lead pack that had separated itself from the rest of the field. With almost a mile to go in the 10K race, Chesang was in sixth place.

Smith said at that point, he knew Chesang was going to have a great race.

"I thought 'wow, this is really going to happen. He is going to run well,'" Smith said. "At that point, you get goose bumps thinking about what could happen. Over the last mile, he hung on, and in the last kilometer, other guys got him, but he held his spot the best he could."

Chesang said he was pleased with his performance against strong competition.

"I felt so great after being All-American," Chesang said. "It was really tough, because everyone wanted to be there. It takes top-30 to be an All-American, so it was hard. I am so proud of (the race)."

Chesang will now move on to the indoor track season, but most of his preparation will be focused on the outdoor track season in the spring.

Chesang said he has the same goals for outdoor track that he had for cross country.

"I have a goal for the outdoor season to be one of the best in the Big 12 and make it to the national meet," Chesang said.

Smith said Chesang's performance this season in cross country solidified his place as one of the top distance runners in K-State history.

"It's been 33 years since a guy finished higher than Mathew finished (at the NCAA meet) and 12 years since we've had an All-American," Smith said. "Mathew is in good company, and we are talking about one of the better cross country kids to ever come through the program."

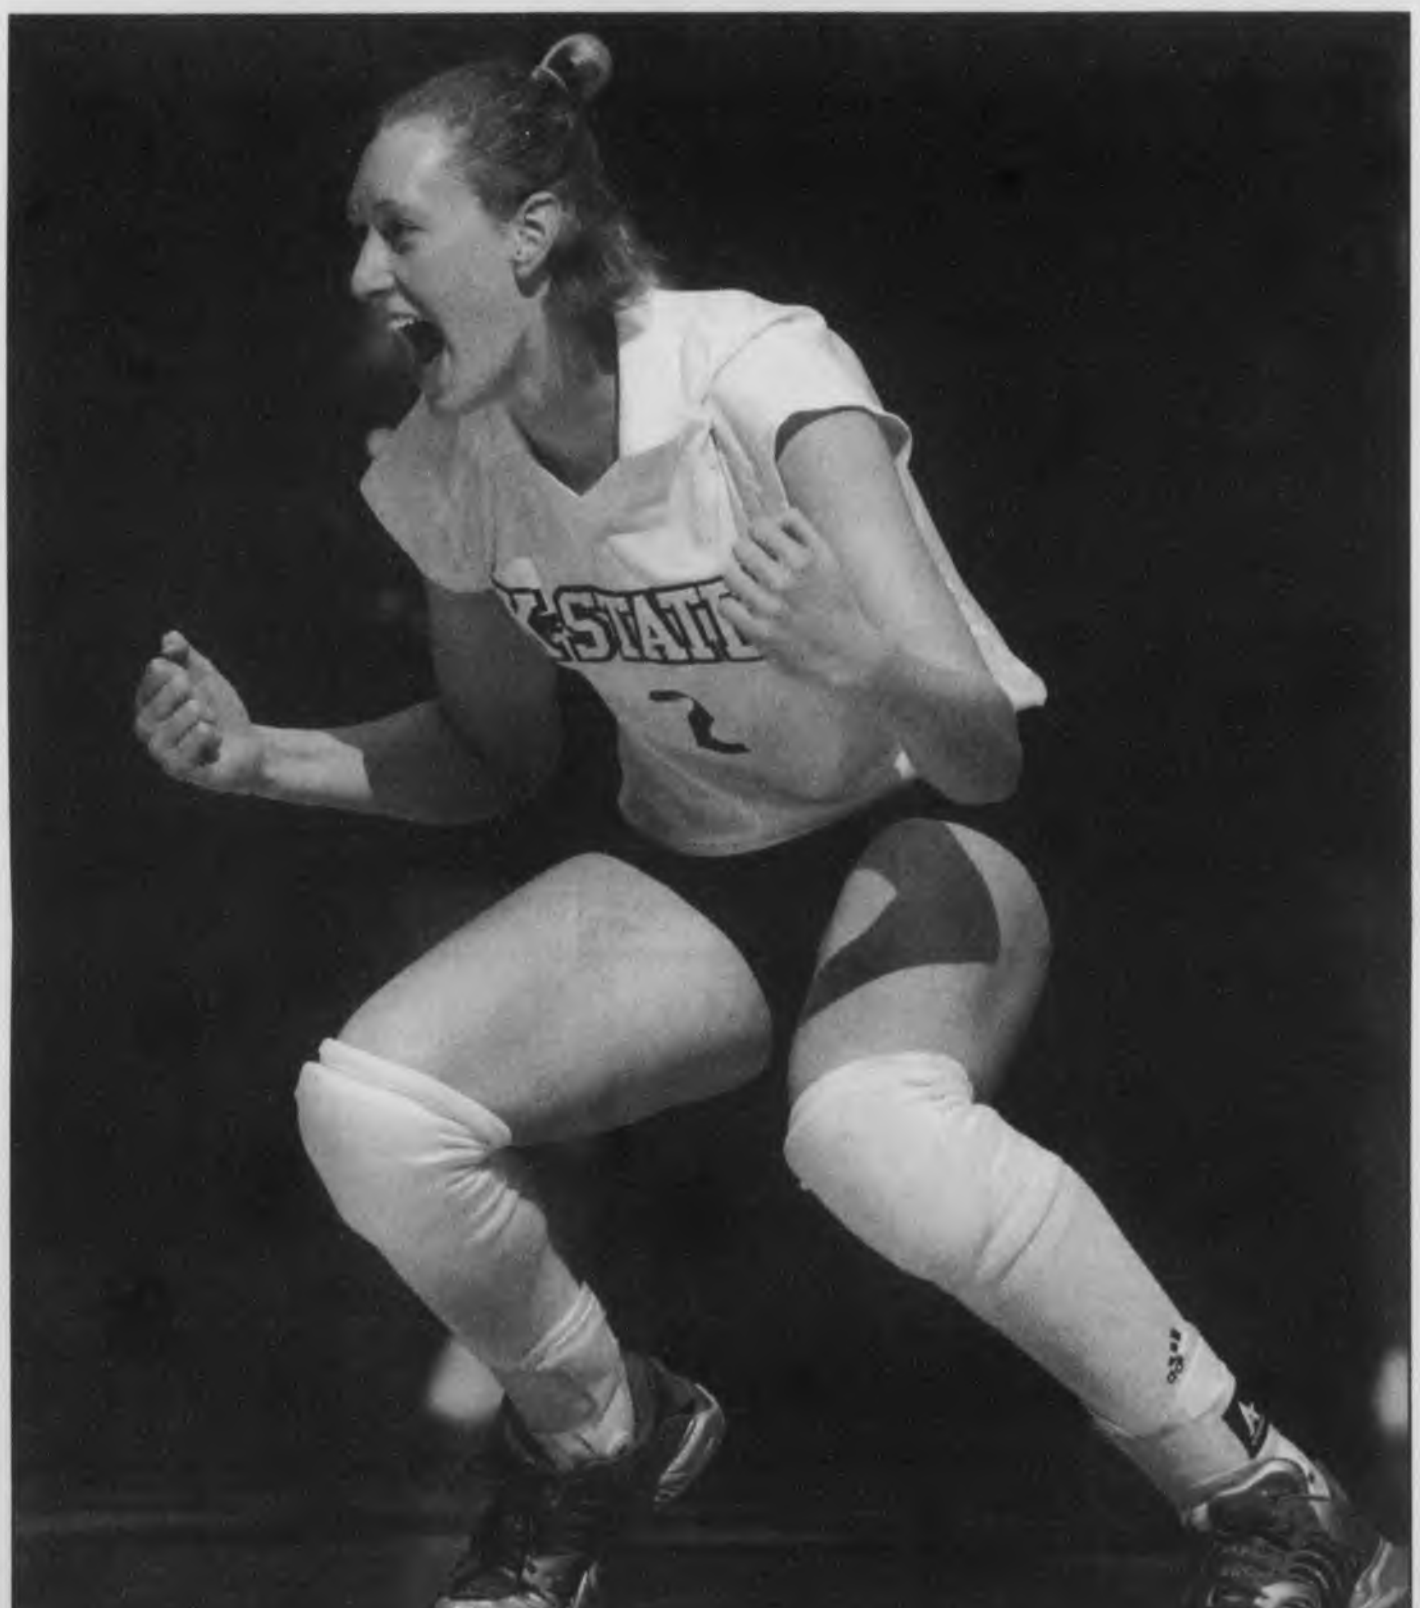
Grand finale

Season ends with Tiger sweep

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's seniors ended their last regular season on Saturday with a home sweep of Missouri, winning 30-28, 30-25 and 30-22 to break a two-match conference losing streak.

The No. 23 Wildcats finished the regular season with a 19-10 record overall and a 13-7 mark in the Big 12 – good for fifth place in the Big 12 Conference. The No. 24 Tigers dropped to 19-8 overall and 14-6 in the conference.



This is the 10th-straight season K-State has won at least 19 matches.

Seniors outside hitter Michaela Franklin, setter Gabby Guerre, outside hitter Vali Hejjas and middle blocker Lisa Martin each played their last match in Ahearn Field House. Hejjas landed 13 kills on .444 hitting, Guerre notched 46 assists and eight digs and Martin added 10 kills and two blocks. With her two blocks, Martin set a school single-season record for block assists with 143.

Coach Suzie Fritz said getting the win was especially important for the seniors.

"They've all just been so very, very special to K-State volleyball, and so I just thought it was very fitting that we were able to play very, very well in probably what will be their last time in Ahearn Field

NCAA Tournament announcement

The Wildcats found out late Sunday, they will head to Los Angeles for the first round of the NCAA Tournament later this week. K-State (19-10) will face Cal State Northridge (17-10) in round one and will play the winner of the University of Southern California/College of Charleston match in round two if it can beat the Matadors. USC is the host school for both rounds. The first and second rounds are set for Thursday and Friday, according to the NCAA Web site, but official match times and dates are yet to be announced.

Wildcats find rhythm in 2nd half to beat Cougars

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In a game pitting teams known for strong defenses and less than stellar offenses, the K-State men's basketball team showed it had the upper hand in both, as the Wildcats defeated the Washington State Cougars 62-53 at Bramlage Coliseum on Saturday.

Coach Jim Wooldridge said the Wildcats (3-0) turned in their top performance of the year against the Cougars (2-1) from the Pac-10 Conference.

"I thought we just had a better team performance at both ends of the floor," Wooldridge said.

Up against a Washington State team that had given up just 42 points to its first two opponents, the Wildcats bettered that number by 20. K-State also turned the ball over only nine times against a Cougar defense that forced an average of 19 a contest heading into Saturday.

"Taking care of the ball was a big part of being able to beat these guys," Wooldridge said.

Sophomore guard Fred Peete led all scorers with 18 points, and senior forward Jeremiah Massey added 15 points and five rebounds on the afternoon.

Much like the Wildcats' previous two games, the team struggled out of the gate, as it trailed 30-28 at halftime.

The second half was a different story.

K-State went on a 13-5 run to start the half and never never trailed again.

The Wildcats shot 42 percent from the field and were 11-of-13 from the free-throw line in the half to hold off Washington State.

Several Wildcats tried to explain why the team, which has outscored opponents in the second half in all three regular season games, plays so much better after halftime.

"We see 'hey this team's sticking with us, they're pretty good'," said sophomore

Women fall to Blue Devils in championship game

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was the game K-State was looking forward to at the Junkanoo Jam tournament in the Bahamas – a potential match-up with No. 10 Duke in the championship game of the Freeport Division bracket.

Prior to leaving for the Bahamas sophomore Claire Coggins said the Wildcats were ready to showcase their talents against top competition.

"We're here to prove who we are and get ready for the Big 12 season," Coggins said.

The Wildcats got what they wanted.

Duke took control of the game from the start, never trailing in its 63-51 win over the No. 16 Wildcats in the championship game on Saturday.

The Wildcats (3-1) were outscored 12-3 to finish the first half and trailed 28-17 at the break.

Out of halftime. Duke (5-1) rolled off the first 14 points to increase its lead over the Wildcats to 25 points.

The Wildcats cut the Duke lead to eight points, but that was as close as they would get in K-State's first loss of the season. It was the second year in a row that the Wildcats lost in the championship game of the Junkanoo Jam.

All-Tournament Team pick Kendra Wecker led K-State in scoring, finishing with 15 points and five rebounds. Coggins tied her career-high with 12 points, and All-Tournament Team selection Megan Mahoney had nine points, 11 rebounds and five steals.

In the Wildcats' 105-61 win in the opening round of the tournament against Illinois State a day earlier, Wecker broke the school single-game scoring record with a career-high 41 points.

The performance broke the mark of 38 points held by former Wildcats Shawnda DeCamp in 1993 and LeAnn Wilcox in 1978.

Wecker scored the first 19 points of the game for the Wildcats, going 9-for-9 from the field. The senior forward finished with a career-high eight 3-pointers, which ranks third all-time in school history for a single game and finished with 25 points in the first half, which was one point shy of tying the school record for most points scored in a half.

Wecker shot nearly 74 percent from the floor and had six steals, eight rebounds and four assists.

Volleyball | 4 Wildcats earn All-Big 12 honors

Four members of the K-State volleyball team were honored for their play this season with the release of the All-Big 12 Conference teams on Sunday.

Senior setter Gabby Guerre and senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas were named to the All-Big 12 first team, senior middle blocker Lisa Martin earned honorable mention honors and freshman Angie Lastra was named Big 12 Libero of the Year.

It was the third straight year Guerre made it on the first team, and it was the second year Hejjas was named to the first team and Martin was named honorable mention.

Lastra's selection as top libero means for the third straight year, a K-State player has received the honor. Former Wildcat Laura Downey-Wallace won the award the last two seasons.

General | Ebersol survives plane crash in Colorado

NBC Sports chairman Dick Ebersol survived a charter plane crash that killed at least two people Sunday, the network said in a statement through its Denver affiliate KUSA-TV.

Ebersol

The jet crashed through a fence and burst into flames at Montrose Regional Airport, which serves the Telluride Ski Area.

NBC said the pilot and co-pilot were killed. Sheriff's officials said three survivors, including Ebersol, were seriously injured, and rescuers were searching for a sixth person listed on the plane's manifest whose seat from the plane was missing from the wreckage.

PGA | Couples wins Skins Game in playoff holes

Fred Couples continued his amazing run in the Thanksgiving weekend tournament, prevailing in four playoff holes over Tiger Woods to claim the final three skins and $340,000, and win his record fifth Skins Game with a total of $640,000.

Couples won all his money on Sunday, starting with a birdie putt worth $300,000 and eight skins on the first hole. He finally won the tournament after Woods' tee shot went into the water on the last playoff hole, the par-3, 204-yard 17th at Trilogy Golf Club on a cold, windy day in the desert.

Couples, 45, has won a record $3,515,000 and 77 skins in 11 appearances in the made-for-TV tournament.

know what I'm supposed to do," he said.

Chance Lee, sophomore in business, helped Boyle with the lights, and he said he was at Theta Xi since the members began decorating.

"I've been mostly working in my room putting up lights," he said. "Each room does their own things. It's not like a rule or anything, but most of them do decorate."

Saturday night was the first time Theta Xi turned on the heat this semester.

"It's been getting cold the last few days," he said. "Up till then, it was pretty warm."

Scott Whitmore, National Weather Service meteorologist, said the mild weather could still bring a stormy winter.

"The weather patterns always change," he said. "It's not too unusual to have mild weather before stormy weather."

The coldest day this month was Thanksgiving Day at 25 degrees, according to the National Weather Service in Topeka. Sunday night there was a severe weather alert.

David Colburn, manager of The Pathfinder, a sporting goods store at 304 Poyntz Ave., said weather affects winter gear sales.

"It varies a lot with the weather," he said. "The coat sales and hats and gloves are definitely affected."

Colburn said Pathfinder has had a little better year than in previous years because of the snow storms from last year.

"There's always some that plan ahead," he said. "Most people don't buy anything until it gets cold and snowy, though."

He said the snow Tuesday brought in more business.

There is also a trend for more winter gear to be purchased if bad weather hits before Christmas, Colburn said. Less is purchased if bad weather hits after Christmas, because people are more apt to tough it out.

"If cold weather comes before Christmas, we do a lot of extra business," he said.

House," Fritz said.

After winning the Big 12 last season, the Wildcats finished this year behind Nebraska, Texas, Texas A&M and Missouri.

Fritz said the win over the Tigers after two straight losses was symbolic of an up and down season.

"We have not been able to put a consistent effort together," she said.

"Not only match to match but game to game. It's been a challenge for us all year. I felt great tonight when we came out after game two and were able to sustain a high level of performance."

TEXAS A&M 3, K-STATE 1

On Wednesday, the Wildcats dropped their second conference match in a row, falling in four games on the road to Texas A&M, 27-30, 27-30, 30-27 and 28-30.

After sweeping the Aggies at home earlier in the season, K-State lost a tightly-contested match to No. 18 Texas A&M.

The Cats did get a strong performance from senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas, who had 24 kills on .382 hitting and 10 digs for a double-double.

Senior setter Gabby Guerre added 11 digs, 51 assists and nine kills.

guard Lance Harris, who scored eight points and hit two 3-pointers off the bench. "So, in the second half, we come out and get fired up a little bit more."

Freshman guard Clent Stewart, who had a team-high six assists, said the Wildcats need to be consistent with their effort at 7 tonight when the Wildcats play Arkansas-Pine Bluff at Bramlage Coliseum.

"Hopefully, Monday we can change that and come out with intensity for two halves," Stewart said.

K-STATE 60, DENVER 56

On Wednesday night, the Wildcats overcame a poor team-shooting performance and a tough Denver inside game to defeat the Pioneers 60-56 at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats shot just 34 percent from the field for the game.

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey led K-State with 15 points and nine rebounds, while sophomore guard Fred Peete added 10 points and four rebounds.

Denver center Yemi Nicholson caused the Wildcat defense problems all through the night.

Nicholson had a game-high 27 points and grabbed a game-high 18 rebounds – tying a Bramlage Coliseum record for rebounds by a K-State opponent.

Notion of putting 'Christ' back into Christmas based on misconceptions of history

Today, people constantly harp on the materialistic veil that shrouds Christmas.

JESSICA GRANT

However, no one seems to ask how we have arrived at this point.

The first mistake my editor made was giving a story entitled 'the history of gift giving' to a history major.

The second mistake made was giving it to me, someone who is not a Christian, which makes me look at any question pertaining to Christianity in a scholarly fashion.

One of the most important things I learned was that our contemporary culture didn't actually take the Christ out of Christmas; instead we added this over time.

One must keep in mind that I am researching this in a very narrow field.

There have been hundreds of cultures that have partaken in similar festivals around this time of year for centuries, but for the sake of column length, I will only be focusing on England and America.

For those looking to do some research into Christmas, try "Unwrapping Christmas," edited by Daniel Miller or "Christmas unwrapped: Consumerism, Christ, and Culture", edited by Richard Horsley, both available in the dusty stacks of Hale Library.

In 1647-under Oliver Cromwell's reign-the British Parliament banned any sort of religious celebrations.

It must be noted that prior to Cromwell's reign British people did participate in a sort of end of the year celebration that was primarily focused on feasting and gift giving outside of the family.

These draconian Puritan ideals swept over into America, and there was little celebration of Christmas after America's initial inception.

However, as groups of more liberal Protestants began immigrating to America, they brought with them Christmas celebrations.

In the 1770s New Yorkers began celebrating St. Nicholas (think of this as a precursor to Santa Claus). Following cues from Great Britain, America did declare Christmas a national holiday in 1890.

It wasn't until the end of the Civil War (marked by a sharp rise in capitalism) that the modern image of Santa Claus began to appear in publications like Harper's Weekly. However, many gifts that were given around this time usually were given to servants and the poor.

Our current image of Santa Claus is a sort of amalgamation of several different figures from European traditions.

Martin Luther objected to the practice of giving children gifts in the name of St. Nicholas, so instead he invented Christkindlein

Manhattan retailers feature specialty Kansas products

K-State items most popular

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are several stores around town that specialize in K-State merchandise and items made in Kansas.

And for the most part business for such stores increases during the holidays when people purchase Kansas items as gifts.

The Kansas Kollection, which has been in business for 10 years, is selling holiday merchandise – like ornaments and purple Christmas trees – in the Holiday Store until it closes for the season at the end of the year. Both stores are located in Manhattan Town Center.

"We tried to find a place to display our Kansas foods and ended up going into KB's," said Karen Streeter who owns the Kansas Kollection. "By moving to a bigger store we increased the size of K-State items like a limestone bench."

Streeter said Kansas-made foods such as Alma cheese, jams and jellies, muffin mixes and elderberry concentrate, which – Streeter said some people think is good for the immune system – are all popular. A package of Kansas foods, Streeter said, can be purchased for $15 to $20.

If a customer pays for shipping, the Kansas Kollection will take the responsibility to mail the package.

Streeter acknowledged there are two major universities in Kansas and the Kansas Kollection sells University of Kansas merchandise as well as K-State items.

"Some people come in embarrassed to buy KU items and say 'oh, it's not for me, it's for someone else'," she said. "The KU collection is not as extensive, and we might sell 10 K-State items to one KU item."

The Palace, in Aggieville, is full of K-State merchandise and has a small room in the back full of Kansas-made items like candles.

"Anything that's made in Kansas is definitely appealing," Andrea Higgins owner of the Palace said. "State of Kansas and Wizard of Oz items are bigger in the summer when people are here for conferences, but some items like T-shirts and mugs are sold as gifts."

With the football team staying home during bowl season for the first time in 12 years, local venders have to make up that revenue with other K-State products.

"We sell a bunch because of the football team, no matter how we're playing, because people come in for games," Higgins said.

For Varney's K-State Place in Manhattan Town Center, missing a bowl will hopefully result in customers buying other K-State merchandise.

"That's a whole product line that isn't there," said Leah Sobba, apparel and gift manager for Varney's K-State Place. "Hopefully they'll take that money and spend it on other stuff, but it's really too early to tell."

So far, the K-State Place's holiday-season business has been as expected. And it's even picked up.

Sobba said ceramic collectibles like Santa's, and jewelry are popular items. She said other items that make good gifts, especially for tight budgets, are T-shirts costing $10 to $20 and coffee mugs and ornaments from $10 to $15.

Holiday sales expected to increase

Gas prices, job market could limit profits

By David Twiddy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – The annual holiday shopping rush started early for many Kansas retailers Friday, as they threw open their doors to bargain hunters before dawn.

Employees at a Best Buy Co. store in Olathe said they had shoppers waiting outside their doors at 1 a.m., five hours before the store was set to open and start selling early bird specials.

Sara Skinner, manager of guest services at a Target Corp. store in Wichita, said the line of shoppers for her store stretched to a Red Lobster restaurant across the parking lot.

"We're just excited to have all these people," Skinner said, adding that the crowd numbers were about equal to what the store saw a year ago. Electronics and toys were the big sellers so far, she said.

At the Hutchinson Mall, lines outside the Sears, Roebuck & Co. and JC Penney Co. stores were well out into the parking lot and two across, said mall marketing director Sue Moore.

"It was just a zoo this morning," Moore said around 10:30 a.m. "Sears has already sold out of their special items."

Retailers nationwide, who rely on holiday sales for a large part of their annual business, saw big crowds Friday as they opened their doors earlier than they have on past days after Thanksgiving and offered deep discounts for early shoppers.

The Washington, D.C.-based National Retail Federation is predicting a 4.5 percent increase in sales over last year, which is slightly lower than the 5.1 percent increase retailers saw the year before. Analysts say high gas prices and a still unsteady job market will keep some shoppers more thrifty this year.

Overall, the federation predicted 130 million shoppers will come out this weekend.

Moore, at Hutchinson Mall, said they aren't all women, either.

"We've had more men out shopping, it seems," she said. "I don't know if the wives finally said, 'OK, I need help.'"

Manhattan Arts Center offers holiday gift items handmade by local artists

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People seeking interesting holiday gifts have to look no further than the Manhattan Arts Center.

The MAC is in the midst of its annual Wrap It Up gift sale, which runs through the Holiday Season.

"This is our sixth year of the sale, and we always have great community response to the sale," said Brady Miller, MAC program and marketing director.

"We really have all walks of life come into the sale because different works of art appeal to different people."

According to the MAC Web site, www.manhattanarts.org, the sale features around 50 local artists whose work sells for anywhere from $10 to $500.

"We do have a lot of pieces that are around $500, but that is definitely a vast minority of the pieces," Miller said.

"We also have a lot of handmade textiles-scarves, hats, purses and gloves that are really popular with a younger crowd."

Miller said the art was selected by a juried process.

"We sent out invitations for regional artists to submit their work in a portfolio and then we had two jurors who selected the artists whose work we would exhibit and sell," Miller said.

Event chairperson Leigh Harders said she was asked to organize the event this year because she has been a member of the arts center for some time.

"We have to be there almost every day, setting up displays and filling in pieces that sell. I've been working with Annette

This stocking, made by a local artist, is on sale for $35 at the Manhattan Arts Center.

COLLEGIAN

"Radina and she and I try to make sure that the displays are organized and pleasing for the public," she said.

Mary Elizabeth Atwood, one of the local artists whose work is for sale at the MAC, said she has been selling her work for Wrap It Up for the past three years.

"I've been doing what I call archetypal masks for about 10 years now. I use my own face for the model and then I paint them with nail polish or shoe polish – whatever I have available. Then I give the masks as name," Atwood said.

Atwood said she finds the artistic process cathartic.

"Every time I make a mask a shift happens. Something heals. Every time someone makes art they manifest a part of themselves to the outside world," Atwood said.

Atwood said she loves the response her masks draw from people.

"What I like best of all about my art is putting the mask out in the public eye and having people recognize me and my work.

"I'm not offended if people find the masks frightening, that just means that they have found a part of themselves in the work," she said.

Miller said having close to 50 artists makes it difficult to display all of the work at once, but the pieces are rotated in as the art sells.

"The idea behind our displays is to have something new and eye catching. We really do have a nice mixture of art work," Harders said.

Miller said 30 percent of the profit from all of the work sold goes back into the MAC.

"This really is one of our biggest events at the MAC.

"It brings in a lot of foot traffic, and it's a positive thing for both the community and the MAC," Miller said.

Baked goods top Santa's favorite snacks list this year

By Matt Groneman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When looking to buy food for the holidays, there is more out there than recycled fruitcake.

While fruitcakes may be on the out, many baked items are in this year.

Kelly Farmer, Radina's employee, said Radina's sells many seasonal baked goods.

Some of the seasonal items include pumpkin tarts and apple tarts, Farmer said. Radina's also replaces their usual poppyseed bread with cranberry walnut bread during the holidays.

Challah, a traditional Jewish bread, is another holiday favorite that Radina's sells a lot of, Farmer said.

"People buy carrot cake a lot this time of year too," she said.

Radina's also caters and takes special orders.

"We do all kinds of special orders for people," Farmer said. "We make pumpkin pies, cheesecakes, whatever people want."

Baked desserts may also be purchased at the Mercado grocery store in Aggieville. The store carries imported traditional Italian and German cakes, Jeff Pfannenstiel, Manhattan resident, said.

Pfannenstiel said they offer items for people who are entertaining.

"We sell specialty crackers for people who are entertaining," Pfannenstiel said.

Mercado also sells specialty jams and chutney varieties around the holidays, Pfannenstiel said.

Pfannenstiel said Mercado is a good place for those who want to bake at home. He said Mercado sells a variety of special baking supplies and spices.

He said another favorite item sold at Mercado is coffee.

"Coffee and tea sales increase, from cold weather as well as the holidays," Pfannenstiel said.

Mercado carries may seasonal coffees and teas during the holiday season, Pfannenstiel said.

Radina's also carries a selection of seasonal beverages, Farmer said.

Pumpkin-spiced lates and apple cider are among the holiday favorites available there during this season.

Rodney Craig, employee of Rickel's liquor said other popular beverages sold at the holidays and enjoyed as gifts include wines and fine liquors.

"We sell a lot more wine on the holidays," Craig said. "We sell a lot of Reislings, Chardonnays, a lot of whites."

Most of the wines are available for reasonable prices. They range from $6 to $20, Craig said.

Another big holiday seller is gift packages of alcohol, Craig said.

These often include a bottle of alcohol and commemorative glasses.

Egg nog is not a big seller at liquor stores around the holidays, but it is sold, Craig said.

"We don't sell a lot of egg nog, but we do sell it," he said. "We only carry it right around the holidays."

Alcohol is a good gift because it usually goes on sale around the holidays, Craig said.

"A lot of stuff goes on sale during the holidays, between November and December usually,"

Gift of love

Personalized gift-giving approach meaningful for couples

It's that time of year again – time to go out and spend what iittle money you have on Christmas gifts for everybody from your parents to your roommate to your favorite professor.

LACEY STORER

It can be frustrating trying to pick out the perfect gift for everyone, but the gift that requires the most effort is the one you buy for that special person in your life. After all, no other gift you buy has the potential to end a relationship.

Buying the right gift for your significant other can be tricky, but there are several easy ways to figure out what your special someone wants.

Guys, when buying for girls, one of the most important things to keep in mind is that it really is the thought that counts.

If you give the right gift that shows you really know her and what she likes, then no matter how big or small, cheap or expensive it is, she will like it.

And she'll like the fact that you really were paying attention to what she was saying all this time.

Just think about who she is, what she does, things she likes. Listening to her talk about the things that take up her time and energy can give you several ideas.

Does she always want to show you the scrapbook she just finished? Then scrapbooking supplies or a gift certificate to a scrapbook store will be very well received. Take this approach to whatever hobby she has, and you'll be good to go.

A popular gift for girls is always stuff from Bath and Body Works, but this can seem pretty generic. If you're going to buy her something like this, make sure you know her favorite scent, and whether she would prefer body lotion or body cream (yes, there is a difference).

Girls, when buying for guys, you need to remember that anything guys can use is usually a pretty good gift. Stay away from the knick-knacky stuff that we girls love to adorn our walls and shelves.

In my experience, any gift that comes from Best Buy or similar stores are always a hit. Guys will always get excited over movies, CDs, computer and video games.

Just make sure it fits in with their tastes – no trying to sneakily make him watch the first season of the O.C. just because you bought it for him. But an old favorite he never bought or the new release he's been dying for will always go over well.

Anything sports related is a safe bet, too. A hat, sweater or any memorabilia with his favorite team's logo on it will be appreciated.

Just try to find something not everyone else will be getting.

For both sexes, if you get really get desperate for ideas, just ask them to make a Christmas list. Your gift will still be a surprise if they write down a couple of things. And one of their wants could give you more ideas, so you could make a gift package.

When it comes to the amount of money that's appropriate to spend, take the amount of time together into consideration. I think that the amount spent is directly proportional to the amount of time, meaning that a one-month relationship does not receive the same price gift as a one year relationship.

Hopefully now you are ready to head and find that perfect gift for your significant other. Try not to put too much pressure on yourself.

Happy shopping.

Holiday shopping requires thought

CHRISTOPHER HARROP

Few things in life can be as important and rewarding as the act of gift-giving.

Finding the right gift is both an art and a science that few master with any degree of accuracy.

While finding the perfect gift is a very personal and ambiguous task, there are a few simple steps one should take before even thinking about heading to the stores or visiting an online retailer's Web site.

MAKING A LIST

Let's be honest: not everyone deserves a gift. While it's admirable to try and shop for everyone in your house or on your hall floor, it's neither practical nor warranted.

Whether someone is lucky enough to receive a gift from you should be commensurate with whether they have been naughty or nice in the past year. If Santa can do it, so can you.

MATERNITY

During pregnancy, women will eat for themselves and the bundle of joy waiting to be born.

If you're in a committed relationship and share many items, remember the following when buying for your loved one: buy for two.

If you're in a relationship, the chances are your tastes in music, film, etc. will synch up with that of your dearest. Use this to your advantage.

Find a movie you both love, enjoy watching it by yourself up until it comes time to wrap it up, then begin enjoying it again Christmas Day.

This is especially helpful for those of you in long-distance relationships.

It's easier to keep your gift a secret while enjoying it in the comfort of your own home.

EQUILIBRIUM

Most people already understand this simple yet crucial step in the artful process of gift giving: finding the balance between quantity and quality.

A stocking stuffer should cost less than $15, and if you spend more than an hour thinking about what to get, you're working too hard.

Spend 15 minutes in a bookstore in the humor or bargain section, or find a novelty CD in the clearance bin at your local record store.

Balance out that stocking stuffer with one gift. Whether the gift consists of one expensive item or a number of cheaper items packaged together, it will balance out your gift-giving demands.

TAKING RISKS

Most people won't hesitate to order something from the Internet when shopping for the perfect gift. This advance in technology not only allows for a greater diversity of gifts to give, but it is a weight off of the minds of gift givers and receivers everywhere.

Assuming you don't buy a personalized gift for a friend or family member, any dissatisfaction they experience after removing the bow can be easily remedied via the Internet.

WRAPPING IT UP

Even the best gift can be lacking if the presentation doesn't live up to what lies under the gift wrap and ribbons.

Depending on the recipient, a layer of Sunday comics from your local newspaper and a few strips of Scotch tape will do the trick. However, gifts such as jewelry, expensive electronics and high-end clothing require something more tasteful.

Stock up on boxes, decorative gift bags, wrapping paper, ribbon and bows. Going the extra mile here will gain you untold amounts of adoration.

Aggieville store owners prepare for holiday season rush

By Jay Dillon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With Christmas only four weeks away, stores in Aggieville have started their preparation for the winter rush.

Diane Meredith, owner of the Dusty Bookshelf and co-owner of Acme Gift, said plans for holiday shoppers are under way.

"We started with our after Thanksgiving sale," Meredith said. "Everything in Acme was 10 percent off on Friday and Saturday, and we served fluffernutter sandwiches (marshmallow fluff and peanut butter). We were trying to draw the shoppers here and away from the mall, they don't have everything."

"We completely turned the store inside out, and we have new and different merchandise," Meredith said. "We have new men's watches, European chocolates, new toys and special floral arrangements especially for Christmas."

At the Dusty Bookshelf, Meredith said sales usually don't occur for the holiday season.

"Our books are already really inexpensive and December is already our best month of sales," Meredith said. "Every Saturday in December we will have cranberry-apple cider and cookies for our customers."

Becky Ballard, owner of Ballard's Sporting Goods participated in the annual Aggieville Brown Bag sale on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

"Almost everything in our store will be 20 percent off with the exception of Oakley's," Ballard said. "We're going to have specials on all of our K-State stuff through the entire month of December."

Ballard said she is expecting less business compared to last year.

"Last year we had a big rush because of the Big 12 Championship," Ballard said. "Last year was our biggest Christmas in years. This year our sales might be down because of the lack of a bowl game."

Ballard said that without the bowl game, there will still be merchandise that she figures to sell.

"We think more Nike workout gear, Columbia clothing and Under Armor will sell this year," Ballard said. "We will still have a t-shirt made for the football team even without a bowl game."

Jeff Levin, co-owner of Varney's said the lack of a bowl game will not affect sales greatly.

"We see the sale for our volleyball team and our basketball team offsetting our normal football sales," Levin said. "Though not having a bowl game will change our normal sales, we will have other specials and sales to offset that loss."

Laziness, sale prices cause shopping procrastination

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some people may blame laziness, some procrastinate and others just enjoy last minute shopping.

Amanda Sullivan, freshman in family and consumer science education, said there is no reason why she waits until the last minute; she just usually procrastinates when it comes to holiday shopping.

"I just like shopping at the last minute," Sullivan said. "Usually things are on sale right before Christmas."

She also said that holiday shopping is stressful regardless of whether it is early or at the last minute. Sullivan said that no matter the conditions, shopping is shopping.

Lynette Atkinson, freshman in athletic training, kinesiology and nutrition, said she also finds shopping to be the same no matter what.

She said she likes to put off shopping because she normally doesn't have ideas for people that she is shopping for.

She said doesn't feel too stressed about last minute shopping either.

"The crowds can be a big deal, but I usually know what I am getting so I can go in and out," Atkinson said.

She said she lives in a medium-sized town, so crowds are not as big of a problem as they would be in a city of much larger size.

Brady Peterson, freshman in engineering said that last year, his family celebrated "Christmas After" on December 26.

He said that his family relaxed on Christmas Day. He said they went shopping the day after to get cheap presents and wrapping paper and to avoid the pre-Christmas rush.

"Wrapping paper was really cheap, and scotch tape sold for next to nothing," Peterson said.

"It (the stores) was surprisingly busy."

– the messenger of Christ – as the gift bearer.

Through mis-pronunciation, the name became known as Kris Kringle. Movies and advertising during the 1950's helped to bring forth the myth as we know it today.

In 1874, Macy's Department Store first displayed around $10,000 worth of imported dolls and set the standard for Christmas window display advertising.

Between 1880 and 1920 many popular American magazines began heavily padding their November and December issues.

Department stores also began ordering special merchandise which was dubbed 'Christmas gifts' and they also began including Christmas wrapping paper as a must buy.

Bloated industry giants like Hallmark and Hollywood have only served to push the materialistic bent that has become Christmas as we know it.

Which raises probably the most obvious, yet overlooked irony relating to the Christmas holiday.

Christmas is a celebration for the birth of Christ, a man whose personal philosophy was anything but materialistic.

Have we, as a culture, taken the Christian ideals of generosity and giving one step too far?

The best DVD gift ideas

KENT HOLLE

1. "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" (Extended Edition)

I'm putting it at the top of my list, because the last two releases have been the finest DVDs of the last two years, and it has 50 minutes edited back in.

Like the first two releases, the film itself is spread across two discs while extras take up the latter two.

2. "The Looney Tunes Golden Collection: Volume 2"

The second release in Warner Bros. series is another batch of some of the finest films ever released.

Along with the 60 shorts, there are a ton of extras for the aficionados.

3. "Clerks: 10th Anniversary Edition"

Kevin Smith's discs have always been great examples of how to make a DVD.

The second offering of his debut flick has out-shown them all. With two-versions of the film, there are a ton of extras.

4. Tie- "Angel: Season Four" and "Freaks and Geeks: The Complete Series"

These two sets are proof that TV shows were meant to be seen on DVD.

"Angel" is a solid set with extras that showcases one of TV's best series.

"The Freaks and Geeks" set is a fantastic show that was canceled within its first season.

The set features an amazing array of extras. Every episode has at least one commentary track, many two.

5. The Star Wars Trilogy

Yeah, like this isn't the biggest release in the history of the format.

People are still upset that Lucas has changed his films. However, they look fantastic, and the sound is awesome.

The extras aren't as expansive as some would like, but the documentary is worth it.

CHRIS HARROP

1. "Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban" (Now available)

Director Alfonso Cuaron didn't miss a step in taking over the much-loved film franchise, and the two-disc DVD set for "Prisoner of Azkaban" holds up nicely against the first two releases.

The film is a safe bet for your gift-giving needs, and the features are plentiful.

2. "Spider-Man 2" (Available Nov. 30)

This is more of a safe bet than anything on this list. Everybody loves Tobey Maguire, and will show your hipster friends that director Sam Raimi hasn't sold out.

The DVD contains a pop-up trivia track, a blooper reel, online featurettes, a 12-part documentary and much, much more.

3. "Dr. Strangelove" 40th Anniversary 2-Disc Special Edition (Now Available)

Director Stanley Kubrick's most comedic outing, "Strangelove" is a dark, humorous look at the Cold War era that continues to resonate today.

Starring the incomparable Peter Sellers in three roles, the film's DVD extras include interviews, a featurette and a documentary.

4. Ultimate Party Collection: "Dazed and Confused" / "Fast Times at Ridgemont High" (Now Available)

This set may not get you in the holiday spirit, but try to resist the urge to party it up during the holidays with this set.

Be sure to check out the new documentaries and interviews on each disc.

5. "The King of Kings" Criterion Collection Edition

What better way to commemorate Christmas via a gift with the Greatest Story Ever Told?

See how one of the greatest directors of all-time (Cecil B. DeMille) imagined the life and times of Jesus of Nazarene.

TONY HERRMAN

1. "The Office — The Complete Collection (First And Second Series Plus Special)"

This set gives you the chance to watch every episode — including the Christmas special — of the show that crushed the competition at last year's Emmy's. This is the perfect gift for Anglophiles and anyone who suffers through monotony.

2. "THX 1138 (The George Lucas Director's Cut)"

The special effects in Lucas' first movie are at least 15 years ahead of their time.

As a two-disc director's cut edition, there's a slew of documentaries included.

This is the movie for both "Star Wars" junkies and art house aficionados.

3. "Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind"

With director Michel Gondry, writer Charlie Kaufman and Jim Carrey as the straight man, plus a great soundtrack, and you've got yourself a hit.

This is the gift for anyone who likes: love stories, women with bright hair and tacky jewelry or the Electric Light Orchestra.

4. "The Terminal" 2-Disc Collector's Set

This is vintage Tom Hanks.

Hank's Viktor Navorksi is one of his best performances.

If you're like me, then your mom has a huge crush on Hanks and this will make the perfect gift for the fam.

5. "The Ultimate Matrix Collection (The Matrix / Reloaded / Revolutions / Revisited / The Animatrix)"

For everyone who refrained from buying each movie from the Matrix trilogy in readiness for an all-encompassing collection, wait no more.

Buy "The Ultimate Matrix Collection" for anyone who enjoys special features and has a lot of free time.

Gifts for the music lover

JESSICA GRANT

1. Kanye West, "The College Dropout"

Easily the best hip-hop album released in 2004 (although props must go to Eminem and Mos Def).

This is a nearly flawless album that defies traditional hip-hop genres and has intense social commentary. Perfect album for a hip-hop fan or your little sibling who loves radio and MTV hits.

2. Calexico, "Convict Pool"

Although it is only seven tracks long, it manages to blend jazz, tex-mex and rock superbly.

The instrumentation on this album is monumental and Joey Burns' gentle baritone is soothing and personal.

This is the perfect for anyone who likes world, country or mariachi music.

3. Norah Jones, "Feels Like Home"

This is the sophomore album from the sultry voiced songstress whose music is a bit of everything.

This is the perfect gift for people who love vocal jazz or anything bordering on adult contemporary.

4. Rufus Wainwright, "Want Two"

The follow-up release to Wainwright's 2003 release "Want One" that is as eclectic as its predecessor.

Pop music blended with a string section and wrenching vocals never sounded this good. "Want Two" makes a great gift for a loved one with a flair for the dramatic.

5. Modest Mouse, "Good News for People Who Love Bad News"

Since its release last spring, this album has not left my player.

It is sometimes buoyant, at times gloomy and always clever. The perfect pop-rock album for anyone with a sense of humor and a love for music.

MARK SIBILLA

1. Madvillain, "Madvillainy"

MC MF Doom and Beat Maker Madlib produce the best hip-hop album this year.

This collaboration saw Madlib exceeding his previous work and MF Doom creating some of his best raps.

This record finds an excellent chemistry between Doom and Madlib.

2. The Streets, "A Grand Don't Come for Free"

MC Mike Skinner follows up his acclaimed debut with this concept album.

Skinner has the uncanny ability to focus on minute details of life and its grand gestures. It surpasses its simple narrative and creates an endearing hip-hop album.

3. Modest Mouse, "Good News for People Who Love Bad News"

Isaac Brock and company break into the mainstream without losing a single bit of their identity.

"Float On" was one of the catchiest singles and the rest of the album does not disappoint. The result of this album is one of darkly optimistic music.

4. The Arcade Fire, "Funeral"

The Arcade Fire create a stunning debut and indie rock's best album this year.

"Funeral" finds the band spinning dim tales while still keeping an underlying sense of hope.

A grand, orchestral album, the Arcade Fire manages to find light in life even when surrounded by death.

5. Loretta Lynn, "Van Lear Rose"

Jack White teams up with Loretta Lynn and revitalizes her career by creating an amazing alternative-country record.

Using White's guitar, he backs up Lynn with rollicking and emotional songs. Lynn hasn't sounded better as she sings about her life, career, and passing of her husband. Quite possibly the best album of the year.

MATT GRONEMAN

1. Prince, "Musicology"

The teacher is back to take you to school. This funk workout is sweatier than James Brown in a Santa suit.

Prince gets political, but keeps the focus on the rump-shakin'.

This is his best album since 1987's "Sign O' the Times." One to jam to in the Little Apple when the ball's droppin' in the Big Apple.

2. Nelly McKay, "Get Away From Me"

This should be on the top of any critic's top 10 list. McKay breaks boundaries like most of us hit snooze on the alarm clock — it just comes that natural.

McKay is a watershed artist that will influence music for decades. This features the best rap to come from Tin Pan Alley.

3. Elvis Costello, "Delivery Man"

Elvis returns to his country roots on an album that seems more and more like one of his best on each listen.

This album drips heartache like a sieve.

Duets with Emmylou Harris and Lucinda Williams always make for more fun than a barrel of monkeys, too.

4. Brian Wilson, "Smile"

This would-be Beach Boys masterpiece is as full of joyous celebration as the Star Spangled Banner.

Wilson and lyricist Van Dyke Parks compiled the ultimate pop music study on old-school Americana. Give this to anyone who needs to smile. Plymouth Rock on!

5. Northern State, "All City"

This rap trio's sophomore album is up there with Salt 'N' Pepa's "Very Necessary" and Missy Elliot's "Under Construction" as one of the greatest female rap albums ever.

Some may quibble over whether or not this is better than their debut, but few would deny the sheer brilliance of both.

Diet pills, pets top gifts that teach recipient new habits

WILL KLUSENER

One of the rituals of this festive season is the practice of gift giving. Unfortunately, those for whom we hold little respect are often left off of our lists.

I've compiled my top ten list of gifts that you shouldn't (or should?), give to that someone this year.

10. FOOD SETS

Nothing says you care more than a $10 gourmet sausage, cheese and cracker plate that's destined to give them gas.

9. HEALTH PILLS

Anti-flatulence and diet pills are the best way to tell someone that you're concerned for their well-being. They'll be so thrilled that your subtle hints will sail right over their head.

8. EXERCISE EQUIPMENT

Ab-rollers and electric abdominizers show that you're concerned about boredom in-between television shows.

7. RECYCLED GIFTS

Just couldn't find a use for that "shower-proof" hair dryer your grandmother gave you?

Simply wrap it up and hand it over. If you don't have the box, tell them you wanted to make sure it worked.

6. ANYTHING-OF-THE-MONTH MEMBERSHIP

Everyone likes to feel like they're a part of something. A year-long membership to a fruitcake, jelly or cheese club will not only boost their ego, it will give them a reason to use the exercise equipment.

5. PETS

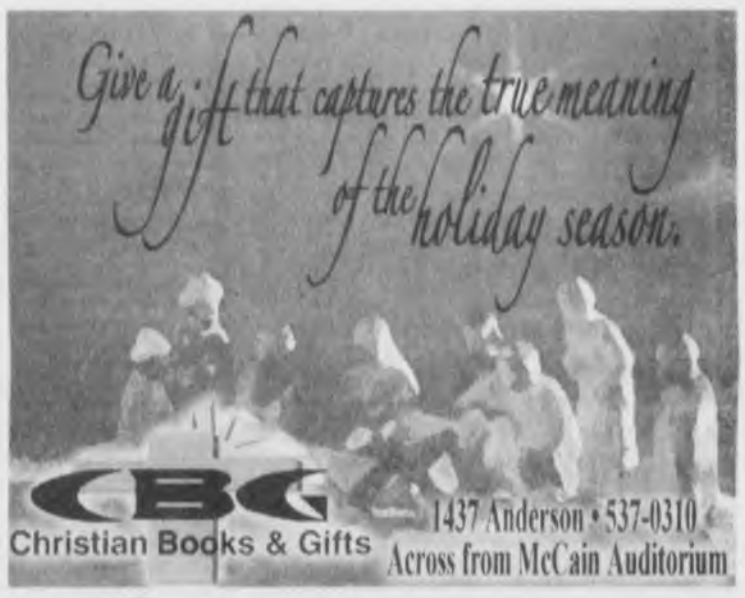
Everyone loves pets, especially when they don't have to take care of them. But a cuddly puppy or furry kitty can function as a dual gift for their new owner. Not only can they expect years of companionship, they'll be forced to learn fiscal and nurturing responsibility.

4. BAGPIPES

Playing an instrument teaches math skills and eye-hand coordination. One note from this instrument will attract animals on the lookout for a dying meal.

3. ENTIRE SEASON OF "BUFFY"

The WB programs are almost on par with Hollywood. Your special someone will love the opportunity to watch an entire season of "Buffy," filled with, um, great acting, realistic and intricate plot lines.



2. STAND-UP FEMALE CAMPING URINAL

This one's for the ladies. The camping urinal is a funnel that will allow her to stand up and write her name in the snow with the best of the guys.

1. SWORD

Chicks dig dudes that have skills, like bow-hunting. They can display this trophy of masculinity prominently on their wall, or run you through for buying them all those crappy gifts.

K-State meat lab offers gift specials

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

From producing summer sausage to Wildcat Loaf, the K-State Meat Lab is offering several holiday specials from now until Dec. 10.

Meat lab manger and research technologist, John Wolf, said sales this year have been good, which isn't surprising.

"This year, we are offering new holiday boxes, including a wooden box with a K-State power cat burnt on it," he said.

Alice Pauley, administrative assistant at Weber Hall, said the lab is full of gift ideas.

"The meat lab offers plenty of options for the average consumer," Pauley said. "They sell traditional meats, from ground beef to turkey, to other holiday specials."

Wolf said his favorites are the summer sausage and pepperoni sticks.

"Our meat lab is really unique, because we allow students to produce the meats," he said.

As manager of the lab, Wolf works with the students as they learn to manufacture.

Wyatt Farney, sophomore in agriculture technology management, said he liked the fact that the college gave students more hands-on experience in the lab.

"I enjoy working directly with a product," Farney said. "It makes me feel like I am really doing something worthwhile."

Eight students work as employees in the meat lab.

"There is so much quality behind our products," he said. "Having students there makes it better than our competitors."

For those who can't pick up their orders, items can be shipped around the world.

"We have shipped as far as Hawaii and Alaska or even Iraq," Wolf said.

"The K-State Meat Lab has had customers for years, and we are very flexible with making arrangements with them. Our lab just wants to assure them that they are getting quality service and a quality product."

Online shopping allows better deals for gift-giving

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the holiday season around the corner, local businesses are not just competing for best sales against each other.

This year, local retailers face heavy business from new competition: e-business.

In mid-November, the Census Bureau of the Department of Commerce reported online shopping sales results for third quarter of 2004. Online retail accounts for 1.8 percent of total shopping. Internet sales are up 21.5 percent from a year ago.

Internet shopping has nearly tripled its popularity since 2000. Brian Carlson, Manhattan resident, said he believes there are multiple reasons for local consumers to consider online shopping.

"I always think consumers today are more comfortable with purchasing online," he said. "Online retailers are reliable, so customers feel safe giving their credit card information."

Christina Magby, assistant manager of EB Games, said despite increasing online sales, EB Games and other local stores have been doing well.

"Our store does not really compete head-on with online stores, but we do understand that some of our shoppers do like purchasing things on the Internet," she said. "If our store does not have an item somebody is looking for, we usually refer them to another local store or a marketplace such as eBay, where they can find the item at a good price."

Carlson said variety and prices are reasons to consider online shopping.

"I have bought anything from clothes to DVDs to a computer online," he said. "If you are a collector, you could spend hours looking for it locally or 15 minutes shopping for it on eBay."

"One of the nice things about shopping online is avoiding sales tax," Carlson said. Some online retailers including Amazon.com, however, tax consumers.

A downside of online shopping is shipping and handling, Magby said.

"People don't want to pay the extra fees."

While online fees may be a turnoff for the average consumer, Carlson said if people search long enough, they can find the right price.

"There is a trade-off with online shopping," he said. "It takes time to find the better deal online. But sometimes you have to sacrifice, buy locally, and pay 25 percent more."

Video game purchases popular among all ages

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They've become a staple in entertainment, and most college students can't live without video games.

However, consumers who purchase video games aren't limited to just children and college students.

Bret Geiger, general manager at EB Games said most of the customers in EB Games tend to be evenly distributed across the age spectrum.

"In general, we see as many parents or grandparents shopping with or for their children as we do college-age students. There are also a lot of military personnel from Fort Riley. The amount of students that shop tends to lapse as they go home for the holidays," Geiger said.

Dana Umekubo, junior in computer information systems at K-State Salina and employee of Game Guy in Salina, and frequent gamer, said he agrees with many of Bret's popular game choices.

Umekubo added "Dead or Alive Ultimate" for the X-Box and "Katamari Damacy" for Playstation 2.

"Many people are buying systems now," Umekubo said. "A lot are buying X-Boxes, so they can play 'Halo 2,' and Playstation 2s so they can play 'San Andreas.' We are actually seeing a shortage of PS2s and X-Boxes."

Umekubo said one of the more popular games of the season won't be available on X-Box, but on Playstation 2s.

"People (should know) that 'San Andreas' is not coming out for X-Box, I get that question all the time."

Both EB Games and Game Guy said that all games were meeting or exceeding sales expectations.

Umekubo said that quite possibly the most popular system this year will be the Nintendo DS.

According to Nintendo's website, "Nintendo DS revolutionizes the way games are played. With dual screens and touch-screen technology, wireless communication and built-in PictoChat software you have the power to draw, write and send messages wirelessly."

The dual screens can allow the player to play games on one screen and send text messages on the other.

Umekubo said games can be made to allow the player the ability to move the character or shift perspectives by touching the screen.

"It isn't a new Gameboy," Umekubo said. "It is more a PDA that you can play Gameboy Advanced games on. I'm not a fan of Mario 64 DS (which is already on the Nintendo DS). I like that you can use the stylus to move the perspective of the games. It is super, super, super – awesome."

Umekubo said there is the possibility for communication-based games with the microphone port.

He said there is the wireless network which allows communication and the ability for wireless LAN games with up to 16 players.

Umekubo said this system is expected to be a big seller, and said many electronics stores have more orders than they can fill.

A parade to light the night

Crowd gathers for Mayor's Lighted Holiday Parade, tree lighting

Cold weather and biting wind did not keep the Manhattan community from enjoying the Mayor's Lighted Holiday Parade on Monday.

Starting on Poyntz Avenue and working its way to Aggieville, the parade ended with the lighting of the Mayor's Christmas Tree in Triangle Park.

Manhattan residents, parents and children gathered to see the floats, vehicles and even people decked out in Christmas lights. Candy canes and hot chocolate were abundant as people watched the festivities.

Aside from the candy, seeing all of the bright floats topped Zach Martin's list as his favorite thing about the parade.

"My favorite part that I look forward to every year is the creativity (of the floats)," Zach, 10, said. "I like lots of colorful lights, not just plain ones."

Zach's mom, Cheryl Martin, said is was nice seeing the various Manhattan businesses participate in the parade.

"It's a fun time for the businesses to have an opportunity to advertise in a real fun way," she said.

Paige McCarthy, Manhattan resident, enjoyed watching her twin daughters Kelsey and Kylie, 8, march in the parade with their local Girl Scout troop, even if she had to brave the cold to do so.

"I usually wimp out and sit in the van," Paige McCarthy said.

For McCarthy, watching the parade is a good way for her to get into the Christmas season.

Speaker advocates fair trade

By Jonas Hogg

Move over free trade, fair trade is moving in.

Shannon Howard, who has spent the last few years working in Nicaragua, said she hopes to open some eyes, ears and minds about the realities of inexpensive international labor Monday night during a dialogue at CrossRoads of ECM.

If you go

Shannon Howard will speak and present a slideshow at 4 p.m. today in Union 209.

Together with the group Esperanza en Accion (Hope Through Action), Howard spoke to support fair trade over free trade, as well as in support of a form of capitalism that advocates good pay for good work.

Currently living in Managua, Nicaragua, Howard deals daily with the trudge and toil that has become sweatshop life. Ever since the 1990's, when free trade came rolling into Nicaragua, the average wage has decreased by 25 percent, Howard said.

A sweatshop worker makes $56 a month, Howard said. She compared this to the $600 a month average for an American fast food worker.

Bush nominates Kellogg company CEO for confirmation as commerce secretary

By Deb Riechmann
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – President Bush on Monday chose Carlos Gutierrez, a native of Cuba who rose from truck driver to chief executive officer of Kellogg Co., to be secretary of Commerce.

If confirmed by the Senate, Gutierrez would succeed Commerce Secretary Donald Evans, a Texas confidant of Bush's, who announced his resignation shortly after the Nov. 2 election. The president called the 51-year-old Gutierrez, a "great American success story" and a visionary executive, who understands the world of business from the "first rung on the ladder to the very top."

"Carlos's family came to America from Cuba when he was a boy," Bush said in the Roosevelt Room. "He learned English from a bellhop in a Miami hotel and later became an American citizen. When his family eventually settled in Mexico City, Carlos took his first job for Kellogg as a truck driver, delivering Frosted Flakes to local stores."

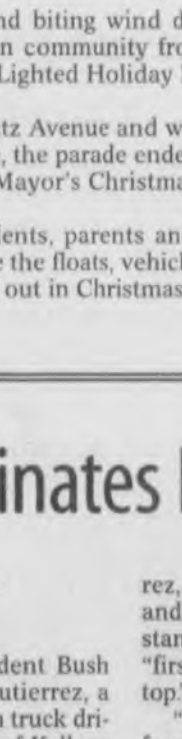
Gutierrez, who was joined by his wife, son and two daughters, is the first new member of Bush's economics team for his second term. Bush's chief economics adviser, Stephen Friedman, announced last week that he is leaving. Other changes also are anticipated, although Treasury Secretary John Snow would like to stay.

"The secretary views his service to the president as an honor and a privilege," Rob Nichols, a Treasury Department spokesman, said of Snow. "Like all his Cabinet colleagues, he serves at the pleasure of the president."

Former Michigan Gov. John Engler, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, hailed the appointment.

"Gutierrez understands every level of manufacturing and he will use that knowledge to further strengthen the U.S. economy," Engler said.

Looking ahead to his second term, Bush is already making changes to his current economics team. And, private economists say it is possible that could include a change at the Treasury post. In early February 2003, Snow, 65, a former chief at railroad giant CSX, replaced Paul O'Neill, who was fired by Bush as part of a shake-up of the president's economic team.



The White House said Bush appreciates the job Snow is doing but refused to say he would remain in his job. "I'm not going to get into talking about individual members of the Cabinet," White House press secretary Scott McClellan said.

QUICK QUIZ

It's been called the greatest television show of all time. It won many critical awards during its tenure on NBC from July 1989 until May 1998.

The show's stars are almost instantly recognizable, and its popularity has led to sitcom deals for actor and producer alumni of the show.

Few can doubt the power of "Seinfeld," even more than six years after the final show aired.

Despite the relative familiarity of the show with the general public, you can test your own knowledge of the sitcom's ins and outs.

1. What is the title character's first name? (One point)
A. Jimmy
B. Steven
C. Jerry

2. In what city does "Seinfeld" take place? (One point)
A. Philadelphia
B. Chicago
C. New York City

3. What annoying postman is the bane of Seinfeld's existence? (Two points)
A. Dave the Postman
B. Newman.
C. Russell Dalrimple

4. Which actor plays George's father Frank? (Two points)
A. Jerry Stiller
B. Patrick Warburton
C. Bryan Cranston
D. Barney Martin

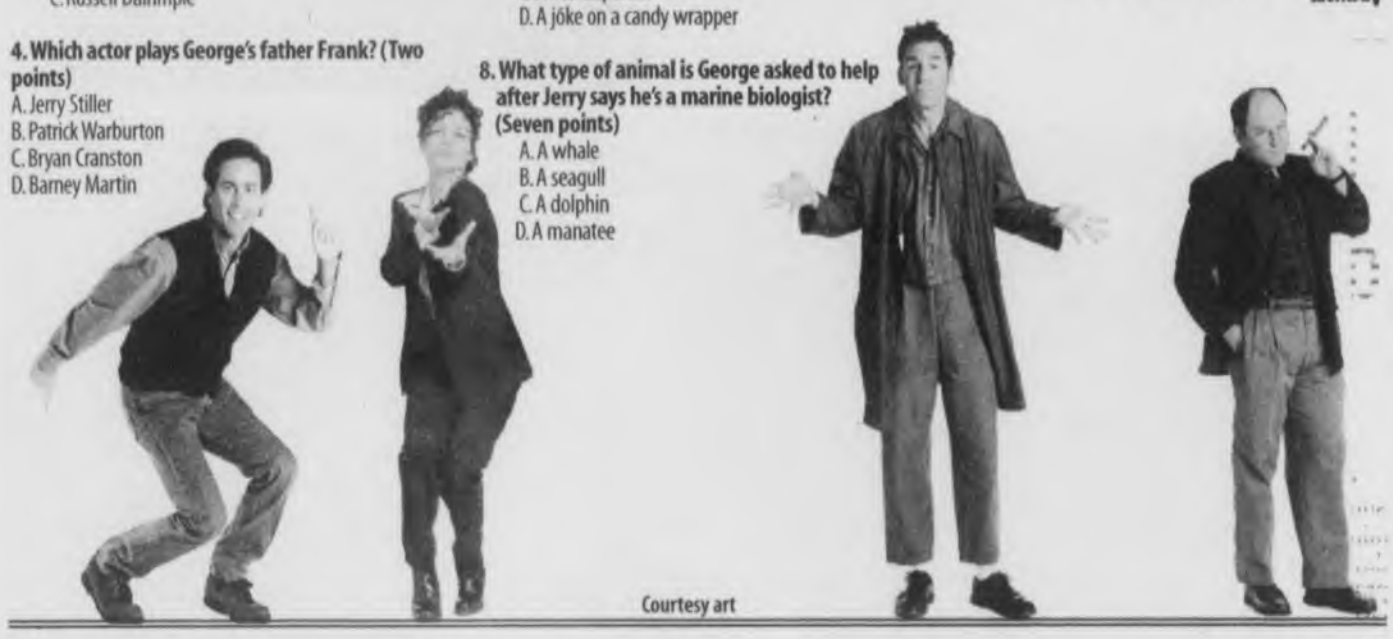
5. What restaurant's bright lights shining into Kramer's apartment cause Kramer and Jerry stress? (Three points)
A. Kentucky Fried Chicken
B. Popeye's
C. Kenny Rogers Roasters
D. Chik-Fil-A

6. What title is bestowed on the winner of "The Contest" in Season Four? (Three points)
A. Lord of the Land
B. Master of Their Domain
C. Archduke Fancypants
D. Uncle Leo

7. What makes Elaine laugh during the piano recital of George's girlfriend in episode 314? (Five points)
A. A daydream about George
B. Kramer's unzipped pants
C. A Pez dispenser
D. A joke on a candy wrapper

8. What type of animal is George asked to help after Jerry says he's a marine biologist? (Seven points)
A. A whale
B. A seagull
C. A dolphin
D. A manatee

9. Which writer is credited for the famous "Soup Nazi" episode? (Ten points)
A. Larry David
B. Gregg Kavet
C. David Mandel
D. Spike Feresten



If you scored zero to three points: Have you ever even watched an episode of "Seinfeld"? Our guess is "no," as in "no soup for you."

If you scored four to 11 points: You probably recall some vague details from watching the show sporadically when it originally aired or during syndication. Your love of Jason Alexander extends about as far as renting "Dunston Checks In."

If you scored 12 to 27 points: You are a fairly serious "Seinfeld" fan. It's highly likely you own or have owned a puffy shirt in your lifetime.

If you scored 28 to 34: You've spent years watching VHS tapes of the show, plus spending Thanksgiving break consuming every second of the first three seasons on DVD plus the special features. The only other possibility is that you're affiliated with the show; in that case, can we have your autograph?

Students Welcome

Fund-raiser for libraries begins

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Friends of the Libraries are offering a cheap and convenient way for students and others to do some holiday shopping this year by sponsoring a bazaar.

Karen McCulloh, assistant to the Dean at Hale Library, said the friends has sponsored the bazaar for six or seven years and the proceeds go to fund various activities at the library.

McCulloh said they try to do the bazaar around this time of year to fit within students' schedules.

"We always do it this week because we really want to be out of the library by next week, because people begin to study really seriously," she said.

McCulloh said the bazaar, which has raised $1000 in the past couple of days, will be open from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. today and from 9 a.m. to around 6 p.m. Wednesday.

She said operating the booth in the evenings is possible because of help from Kappa Alpha Theta sorority.

The booth contains "gently read" fiction and non-fiction books, text books, cook books, videos, CDs and other donated items, as well as baked goods, candy and items made by members of the organization.

In addition, McCulloh said raffle tickets are being sold for $1 each for a wreath decoration.

High court sets cutoff date in election review

By Natasha Lisova
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KIEV, Ukraine – Ukraine's Supreme Court gave the prime minister's legal team until Tuesday to study evidence of fraud presented by the opposition in last week's election, while outgoing President Leonid Kuchma endorsed the idea of a new vote "to preserve peace" in the divided former Soviet republic.

Kuchma, who has called for compromise throughout the crisis, said Monday a new vote might be the only way to resolve the weeklong standoff in which tens of thousands of opposition supporters have blocked official buildings in the capital and eastern provinces are threatening to seek autonomy.

The demonstrations continued Monday night as throngs packed Kiev's snowy Independence Square, waving Ukrainian flags and orange flags to show their support for opposition candidate Viktor Yushchenko, who addressed them. The defense minister said the army would not use force against the people, the Interfax news agency reported.

"If we really want to preserve peace and accord, if we really want to build a democratic state ... let's hold new elections," Kuchma was quoted as saying by Interfax. He said Ukraine needs a "legitimate president."

Yushchenko, who claims he was robbed of victory, has called for a new election on Dec. 12 under international auspices.

Ukrainian Prime Minister Viktor Yanukovych, who was declared winner of the disputed Nov. 21 runoff vote by the nation's Central Election Commission, offered lukewarm support for a new vote, saying he would accept it if the opposition's allegations of fraud were proven.

But Yanukovych, who is supported by Kuchma and the Kremlin, said he had not seen any evidence of fraud, and he suggested that another vote would be illegal.

"If there is evidence of falsification, I will agree with this decision," Yanukovych said while meeting with Kuchma and top officials from eastern Ukraine. He stressed allegations of fraud must be proven by a "clear, honest and transparent" investigation.

Yanukovych said he would call on voters in Donetsk and Luhansk – two industrial regions in Ukraine's east where he has strong backing to participate.

A prescription for trouble

Canadian drug deal beneficial

ALTAF KARIM

I fondly recall my grandfather having one and a half dozen pills daily as a side dish for his brunch and dinner. He survived his eighties eloquently and gifted the world with a beautiful collection of his poetry, thanks to the availability of affordable health plans and inexpensive medicines in Pakistan.

Hemingway said aging is a common curse of mankind. You lose your luck and ability to catch things like a fish when you grow old. It could be worse if you live in the United States and need drugs to stay alive. Some here dare not fart unless their health and bank balances permit it.

To deal with this situation, moving to Canada could allow you to enjoy their less-expensive health care plans. If relocation isn't an option, then importing drugs from our neighbor to the north may be.

According to a study conducted by Families USA, prices of many drugs are skyrocketing, including medicines used by the elderly. The cost of these drugs have increased by three and a half times the rate of inflation in recent years.

On the other hand, 45 million Americans, including 4.3 million children and around 1.5 million seniors are living without health insurance according to the U.S. National Center of Health Statistics. These people should be taken care of.

Democrats have been fighting for this cause for a long time. According to CBS News, Sen. John Kerry supported a program to lower the cost of prescription drugs and make health plans more affordable. This would be feasible if the U.S. government allowed drug importation from Canada.

By opening the Canadian border for the legal import of drugs, America will create an environment of healthy competition between Canadian and U.S. drug companies. That would eventually lower the cost of the prescription drugs in the U.S. if companies want to get their customers back.

Right now the Canadian government is buying drugs from companies in both countries (the U.S. and Canada) by paying them regular price. Capitalism Magazine says that Canadian government is selling these drugs back to their people at a subsidized rate under their universal health care program.

On the other hand, the U.S. government can easily control the flow of drugs out of the country by increasing taxes or ending tax breaks for U.S. companies, particularly those exporting drugs. Like Canada, the U.S. government can spend tax revenue on drugs for senior citizens who can't afford them.

The U.S. government should impose tax increments on small businesses because 60 percent of uninsured workers are employed by them. These small businesses should be exempt from tax increments if they arrange insurance plans for all employees.

The plan for legalizing drugs from Canada helps both the U.S. government and the U.S. economy in many ways. Most importantly, it's quite promising for common consumers in America.

Drug importation weakens FDA

CHAZ STEIMEL

Just more than a month ago, Missouri Governor Bob Holden announced Missourians will now be allowed to purchase drugs via mail from Canada.

This system, called the I-SaveRx (which Illinois also adopted), allows consumers to purchase cheaper drugs from more than 100 available prescriptions from Canada, Ireland and the United Kingdom.

Reducing high drug costs for the elderly: who is going to be against that? Certainly not I, but this is not the way to go about it.

Drug importation is a poor choice as policy for reducing high drug costs, because it undermines research and further endangers the health of Americans.

As the Heritage Foundation reported in an Aug. 25 article, America's pharmaceutical industry is envied by the rest world in part because of our private research.

The privately funded research and development programs reward risks and are responsible for 43 of the 47 "blockbuster" drugs in recent years. The down side is that if the government doesn't pay for the "R&D," the consumers do, hence the high costs of drugs.

If we were to purchase our drugs from foreign countries, we would undercut our own industries, thus failing to reward drug companies for their research and risk, which the Boston Globe of Nov. 1 illustrates as a necessity in modern times.

Furthering drug importation also endangers American lives.

America has enough problems with regulating our own prescription drugs, i.e. the thousands of unnecessary deaths caused by Vioxx, in industries we control. Opening our borders up to foreign competitors, which cannot be regulated by the FDA, only decreases its control.

America is experiencing a flu vaccine shortage in part because we relied on a UK-based company to produce roughly half of our vaccines. Chiron Corporation, responsible for producing more than 50 million flu vaccines for America, shut down this fall.

It is easy to dismiss the flu as a mere annoyance, but as the Seattle Times reported, more than 36,000 Americans die from flu each year; with the shortage of vaccines an additional 45,000 may die this year.

If America relies more on others for drugs, the FDA will become more ineffective in guaranteeing pharmaceutical supplies.

Many alternatives should be explored over time, but an initial route is to take the advice of the Boston Globe, which suggested that countries should index their drug costs to per capita GDP rates to help create a progressive funding system for research, alleviating Americans from the singular pain of funding research, while insisting that foreigners pay an equal share for drug advancements.

Drug importation is not a feasible answer to high drug costs; it is merely a political façade. America does not need to import drugs. America needs others to pay for their fair share of those drugs.

Bundling up in style

Local clothing businesses discuss winter dress trends

By Alison Filla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Staying warm in the winter can be easy.

Being fashionable while staying warm is a bit harder.

Local businesses have new winter lines to accomplish both goals.

Cindy Kulp, manager of The Buckle in Manhattan, said jackets and blazers are the key fashionable clothing items this winter. She also said bolero sweaters are popular right now.

"They're an updated sweater that ties above the belly button," Kulp said. "You would wear a long tank underneath."

Another style Kulp said is very stylish is Le Tigre, a line that features an 80s retro, preppy look including polos, track jackets and sweaters for both women and men.

Kulp said low-rise, tight-fitting jeans will continue to be a popular trend for girls, while button-up shirts with a contour fit will continue to be popular for guys.

"For guys, the jean-cuts are going to be getting slimmer and the shirts contouring more. Of course hoodies are going to continue to be popular," Kulp said.

Courtney Lyngen, sophomore in apparel design and assistant manager in-training at Gadzooks, said blazers are definitely in this winter. She also said swoop neck sweaters will be big.

Jenn Hofstetter, K-State apparel graduate and assistant manager of Gadzooks, said she agrees that blazers are a big seller, as well as tweed, abrasion jeans and vintage accessories such as brooches and chandelier earrings.

Hofstetter and Lyngen said they agreed metallic colors such as gold and silver are big, especially with shoes.

However, Hofstetter said blazers have replaced ponchos in terms of popularity.

"Ponchos were huge in the fall, but we haven't sold as many recently," Hofstetter said. "We've been selling more blazers."

Chris Dalida, employee at Zotcis Attire in Aggieville, said he thinks clothes will be dressier this season.

"A lot of people are going to not be so afraid to dress up," Dalida said. "At least that's how it should be. If you have nice clothes, use them."

Stripped down 'Bomb' is a rare dud album from U2

"How To Dismantle an Atomic Bomb"

Album review by Matt Groneman

Bono has penned the most honest lyrics of his whole career.

"I like the sound of my own voice, I didn't give anyone else a choice," he sings in "All Because of You," slated to be the second single off of U2's new album "How To Dismantle an Atomic Bomb."

Elsewhere Bono has lyrics even more attuned to his personality; "Some people got way too much confidence."

The sad thing is, Bono doesn't realize the irony and thinks he's qualified to give this advice.

U2 is a band that has taken itself way too seriously for some time now, and their music has honestly suffered because of it.

"Achtung Baby" was good. "Joshua Tree" was phenomenal. "War" was the best, but is unfortunately forgotten.

"All That You Can't Leave Behind" was a big step back in the right direction, but "How To Dismantle An Atomic Bomb" seems like the biggest step backwards.

This is perhaps the most stripped-down album of U2's career, which should be a good thing, but even stripped down, U2 doesn't play a lot of the music.

U2 is a musically adept band capable of playing just about anything. The Edge has one of the most distinct guitar styles in rock and Adam Clayton is a talented bassist. Larry Mullen is a fairly good drummer too.

Listening to this album, it is clear that every sound on it could easily be made by U2. But when the drum machines overpower the actual drum kit, as they do on some tracks, it gives the album a very artificial feel.

The one track where synthesizers actually help is where they usually work best for U2, on a Brian-Eno-and-Daniel-Lanois-produced track.

The trouble starts with the song's title, "Love and Peace or Else." This passive-aggressive attempt to end violence is about as effective as P. Diddy's "Vote or Die" campaign.

The chorus endlessly calls for "love and peace," but it's hard to believe when backed with heavy, aggressive droning. This is one of many failed protest songs, along with tracks like "Miracle Drug" where Bono offers to trade his girlfriend for stem cell research.

Their sound is closer to their early years upon first listen, but quickly fades off into what becomes a mediocre record rather than one filled with fiery passion.

One track that does save this album is the unique "Original of the Species." While not a great track, this song about wanting to save a girl from the pressures of showbiz and refusing to date her because he doesn't want her personality spoiled. Unfortunately, one track isn't enough to save this album, and the end result is even less than SALT II; it's a mostly dismantled U2.

DFA1979 album strong

"You're a Woman, I'm a Machine"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

Jesse Keeler and Sebastien Grainger are jerks.

When their label asked them to change their band's name (Death from Above), they responded by adding the number 1979 to their moniker and declaring a "jihad" on the head of the label.

The boys bring this attitude and more on their Vice Records debut, "You're a Woman, I'm a Machine."

It's a break-up album for dance punks and an emo album for noise rockers.

They bring the sonic assault with drums, bass and the occasional synth line. That's it.

It may sound far-fetched, but this album is overflowing with hooks, killer riffs and (most surprisingly) an emotional core that makes this album much more than just a great party album.

The album opens innocently on "Turn it Out" with a quiet but ominous plinking of piano chords, and then the listener is bludgeoned with a mess of feedback and heavy percussion before the song breaks into a killer bass riff.

The song "Romantic Rights" opens with metalloid squelches that seamlessly move into the main riff. Sebastien Grainger screams over and over in the chorus, "I don't need you/I want you."

The song, "Blood On Our Hands," is an album highlight. Grainger both questions if girlfriend will despise him if he leaves her, while also accusing her of being the cause of his departure.

"There is blood on all the shoes you've worn/From the people you've been stepping on," is one of the many lines in the song that drips with hurt and bitterness.

The album goes out just as effectively as it opened. The final three tracks are particularly excellent. The title track finds the albums frustration at its peak when lines such as "Now that it's over, I love you more and more."

"Pull Out" is a short track with a subject that is recognized simply by the title. The final song, "Sexy Results" is a swaggering song, complete with a cowbell beat that shows the narrator back on the prowl.

The album doesn't have a weak track on it, but the two instruments can limit the sound the band can produce. This can be overlooked when the end results are this powerful.

Keeler and Grainger have produced an emotionally heavy album and retain the tension and attitude of rock and roll.

NFL needs to nix certain holiday tradition

ANTHONY MENDOZA

The stuffing is finished, the leftover turkey is an afterthought, and it's back to a balanced diet of Ramen noodles, bread and water.

The Thanksgiving holiday is over and while it will return next year, unfortunately so will the sporting events that come along with the four-day holiday weekend.

Why the NFL continues to force the nation to watch the Detroit Lions every year is beyond me.

It is tradition, but when you line them up against the offense of the Indianapolis Colts led by Peyton Manning, it is bound to not be a fun game to watch – unless you are a fan of the Colts, the Arena Football League or watching baseball games at Coors Field in Colorado.

The Colts, to nobody's surprise, beat the Lions 41-9, with Manning throwing six touchdowns – four of them in the first half – before viewers had the chance to change the channel to "King of the Hill" or "American Chopper" marathons running on competing cable channels.

Manning is only seven touchdowns away from tying former Miami Dolphin Dan Marino's record for touchdown passes in a season with 48.

He also set an NFL record, throwing at least four touchdowns in five straight games and still has five games remaining to pass Marino.

I do not have a problem with the other team, the Dallas Cowboys, every Thanksgiving Day, because fans have an opinion on the Cowboys. Either you love them or hate them, which makes for a great game to watch, even if it is against the lowly Chicago Bears.

What I do have a problem with is the Skins Game – a made-for-television event that pits four of the best golfers in the world against each other to play for cash.

A made-for-television event that has millionaires playing against other millionaires for cash prizes is what is so stale about this event.

Does Tiger Woods really need another few hundred thousand dollars in his pocket? Can't he just sell a few more DVDs about his life and his golfing career, even though both are far from over?

Do we really need Annika Sorenstam to prove that she is a great golfer again and can play with the men?

If the Skins Game wanted to be interesting again, it should bring golfers like John Daly and David Duval out to the course.

Leave those who make millions upon millions year after year at home.

Leave this game to somebody who can actually use the prize money such as Daly, who can buy plenty of Jack Daniels, smokes and promote his horrible career after golf as a country singer with his prize winnings.

Why not bring Duval to the event?

Since Woods came into prowess on the PGA Tour, Duval has gone from the best player in the world to unable to make a cut.

Everyone loves the underdog, and nobody would mind seeing Duval win a few hundred thousand and possibly pick up a bit of confidence and make a run back at becoming a factor once again on the Tour.

Since this is the same schedule we have to look forward to next year, at least we have the Detroit Pistons at the Indiana Pacers and Miami Heat at the Los Angeles Lakers in two intriguing games on Christmas Day.

Men's basketball team never trails in win

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Playing its third game in six days, the K-State men's basketball team might not have had much energy left against Arkansas-Pine Bluff on Monday night in Bramlage Coliseum.

It wasn't needed.

Despite a slow start, K-State (4-0) easily dismantled the Golden Lions (0-3) 76-42 in a game in which the Wildcats never trailed against a team that went 1-26 a year ago.

The Wildcats held the Golden Lions to 10 points and 14.7 percent field goal shooting in the first half – both record lows by an opponent in Bramlage Coliseum.

The 32-10 halftime score was also the lowest combined scoring output in Bramlage history.

"We came in tonight and knew this team wasn't as talented as other teams we've played against," freshman guard Clent Stewart said. "But we knew we still had to come out and play, because on any given night, any team can beat any team."

Stewart led all scorers with 15 points, hitting all five of his 3-point attempts.

K-State also got a double-double out of junior forward Marques Hayden. Hayden had 11 points on 5-of-7 shooting along with 10 rebounds.

In what has become a pattern for K-State thus far this season, the Wildcats started off the game sluggishly.

K-State turned the ball over 10 times in the first half – one more than the entirety of the win over Washington State on Saturday.

Coach Jim Wooldridge said the team looked tired and slower than usual on the floor Monday night.

"Some of those turnovers were unforced, and some were out of fatigue and just not being tough enough to fight through it and take care of the ball a little bit better," Wooldridge said.

After an early 13-6 lead halfway through the first half, the Cats broke the game open with 3-pointer by sophomore guard Lance Harris with 8:59 left until the break, followed by two Stewart 3-pointers on the next two possessions.

In a game in which the outcome was never really in doubt, Wooldridge was able to play all 14 Wildcats that suited up, including walk-ons Mark Frederick, Josh Campbell and Kyle Taylor.

"It was good we could play the entire team, and play some guys that practice real hard," Wooldridge said. "It's always good to get them out there."

And the bench did more than just show up for Wooldridge, as it combined for 27 points.

Junior guard Schyler Thomas led the K-State reserves with nine points, freshman guard Curtis Allen added eight and sophomore forward Tyler Hughes had four points, six rebounds and five blocks.

Hughes said each bench player, puts it all on the floor every time one get the chance.

"We just come off the bench and try to do the best we can and bring everything we got," Hughes said.

"That's what coach asks of us, and that's what we do."

The Wildcats now have a week to prepare for their next game at 7 p.m. Monday against Oakland at Bramlage Coliseum.

Wooldridge said the added practice time that comes with the weeklong break will benefit the team.

"We've got some time now to go back and readdress some things, take some things out, add some things and try to develop players more," Wooldridge said.

"I'd hate to think of playing a game in another 48 hours. That'd be like playing an NBA schedule."

Stewart gives K-State boost versus Lions

Freshman sharpshooter a perfect 5-of-5 from beyond the 3-point line

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Clent Stewart proved he was more than just a threat handling the ball in K-State's 76-42 win over Arkansas-Pine Bluff on Monday.

Against the Golden Lions 2-3 zone defense, designed to stop the inside play of the Wildcats, the 6-foot-4 freshman guard torched Arkansas-Pine Bluff from the perimeter, shooting 5-of-5 from behind the 3-point line.

"They came out and played a lot of zone, basically the whole game, and I hit some shots early, and I started feeling it," Stewart said.

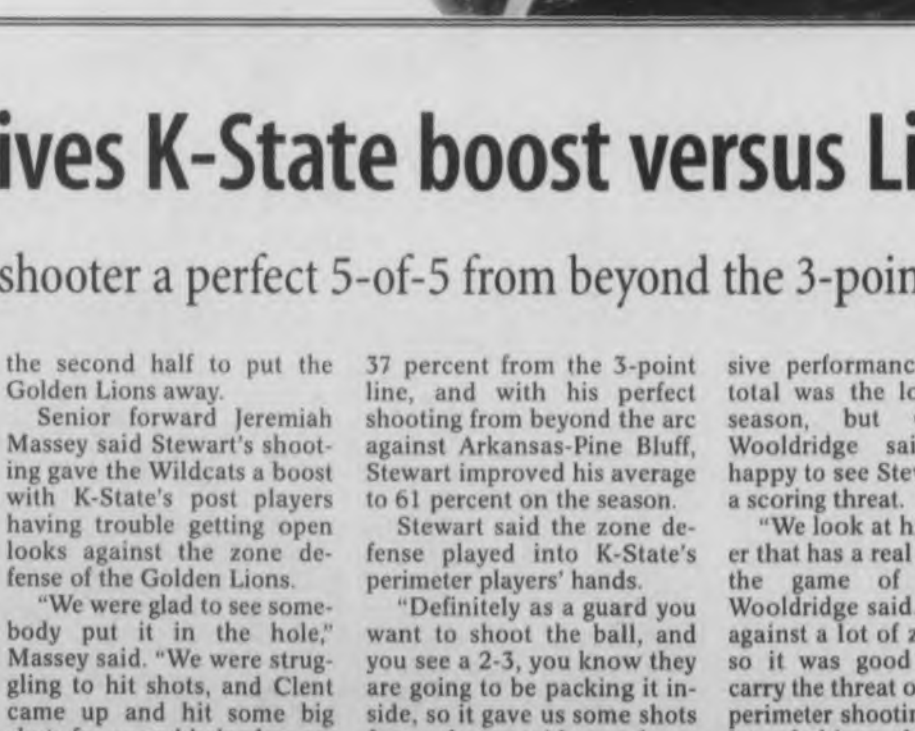
Stewart ended his night with 15 points, two assists and one steal in 23 minutes of play. His 15 points were a season-high and led all scorers.

The Broken Arrow, Okla., native's previous game-high for points was eight in K-State's first regular season game against North Dakota State. Stewart was averaging seven points per contest in three games.

In the first half, Stewart helped to break open the game with back-to-back 3-point shots to cap a 13-0 run with seven minutes left. He then connected on three more to open the first six minutes of the second half to put the Golden Lions away.

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey said Stewart's shooting gave the Wildcats a boost with K-State's post players having trouble getting open looks against the zone defense of the Golden Lions.

"We were glad to see somebody put it in the hole," Massey said. "We were struggling to hit shots, and Clent came up and hit some big shots for us and helped us get the win."



Coming into Monday's game, Stewart was shooting 37 percent from the 3-point line, and with his perfect shooting from beyond the arc against Arkansas-Pine Bluff, Stewart improved his average to 61 percent on the season.

Stewart said the zone defense played into K-State's perimeter players' hands.

"Definitely as a guard you want to shoot the ball, and you see a 2-3, you know they are going to be packing it inside, so it gave us some shots from the outside, and we started knocking them down," Stewart said.

Despite Stewart's offensive performance, his assist total was the lowest of the season, but Coach Jim Wooldridge said he was happy to see Stewart become a scoring threat.

"We look at him as a player that has a real good feel for the game of basketball," Wooldridge said. "We played against a lot of zone tonight, so it was good to see him carry the threat of that kind of perimeter shooting. He does a lot of things that help our team, and when you throw in the shooting tonight, it just adds to his overall game."

K-State's Clent Stewart guards Arkansas-Pine Bluff's Martese Coleman during the first half of Monday's win at Bramlage Coliseum. Stewart scored a career-high 15 points during the game.

Volleyball | First round match date, time announced

The K-State volleyball team will play at 7 p.m. (5 p.m. PT) on Thursday in its first round NCAA Tournament match against Cal State Northridge in Los Angeles.

If K-State wins, it will face the winner of the following 9 p.m. (7 p.m. PT) match featuring host school Southern California against College of Charleston . The second round match is set for 7 p.m. on Friday at the Lyon Center in Los Angeles.

Basketball | Wecker picked Big 12 player of the week

Wecker

Following a week in which she broke the K-State women's basketball single-game scoring record, senior forward Kendra Wecker was named Big 12 Conference Women's Basketball Player of the Week on Monday.

Wecker scored a career-high 41 points in the Wildcats' first-round victory over Illinois State at the Junkanoo Jam over the weekend. The Marysville, Kan. native was 14-of-19 from the floor and accounted for K-State's first 19 points of the game.

The senior followed up her record-breaking performance with a team-high 15 points in K-State's loss to No. 10 Duke in the tournament's Freeport Division championship game.

This is the fifth time Wecker has earned conference player of the week honors in her career.

Football | Report says Nash quits at Missouri

Nash

Missouri starting running back Damien Nash has quit the team, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, reported Monday. University spokesman Chad Moller would neither confirm nor deny the report. Nash confirmed to the Post-Dispatch that he had quit, but he declined further comment.

Nash, a junior from St. Louis, led the Tigers with 792 yards on 164 attempts and scored seven touchdowns. In Saturday's finale for Missouri (5-6, 3-5 Big 12), Nash carried 12 times for a season-low 26 yards in a 17-14 overtime win at Iowa State.

He gained just 38 yards on 12 carries the previous week in a loss to Kansas.

The relationship between Nash and Pinkel apparently soured after Nash was critical of play-calling following Missouri's 20-17 loss at home to Oklahoma State on Oct. 23. He was suspended for one game and even after returning, his playing time eroded.

celebrating and the lighting of the tree and the weather, it all reminds me of Christmas," she said.

Mayor Brad Everett said the parade and tree lighting helps everyone get into the Christmas spirit.

"It sets the tone," Everett said. "I think it certainly kicks the holiday season off. It brings into focus what the season is about."

"The floats, the lights and everything – seeing kids wave at Santa Claus and light up. When you see kids light up and smiling, it's all worth it, and I think that's what the season's all about."

Bronwyn Fees, Manhattan resident, said she thought the parade helped show the true spirit of caring for each other during the holidays.

"The holiday season reminds us of the importance of helping one another," Fees said. "And, the parade helps us remember that we need to take care of one another and work together as a community."

Bringing Manhattan residents together is what Marie Shepard enjoyed about the parade.

"I like the sense of community," Shepard said.

Even the weather was cooperating to help set the holiday scene. Snow began to fall just as people began heading toward Triangle Park to watch the tree lighting.

"It's perfect," Fees said. "Good timing."

The annual U.S. minimum wage is $6,000, she said. In Nicaragua, however, the average family will make $430 per year, she said.

And there are 80,000 sweatshop workers surviving on this sum today.

There are gender issues to consider, as well. The shops employ 99.9 percent women who receive low wages for long hours.

The reason they only employ women, Howard said, is because women are "more docile and controllable" than men.

Consider also, that since electricity was privatized in Nicaragua, prices have gone up seven times what they formerly were, Howard said.

But, she said, the solution to many of these problems can be found through the revitalization of these economies – from free trade to fair trade.

While still competitive, fair trade places a higher value on fair wages paid at all levels of production, Howard said.

Nicaraguan coffee farmers involved in fair trade make almost five times more money than those who are not.

Because coffee is the world's second largest commodity – second only to oil – this translates into increased wages for farmers across the globe.

Fair trade products are even rising on the market. Coffee is the most readily available fair trade item and can be had at coffee shops right here in Manhattan.

And fair trade businesses, themselves, have grown by 271 percent this year alone, Howard said.

Gutierrez, whose family fled Cuba in 1960 when he was 6, joined Kellogg in 1975. Known for having a strong work ethic and a seemingly endless stream of ideas, he worked all over the world for the company before being promoted to president and chief operating officer in June 1998.

"I believe passionately in your leadership and direction you've set," Gutierrez told Bush.

"I believe in your call for a vibrant, growing, entrepreneurial society where everyone has the opportunity to experience the joy and the pride of ownership, where everyone can contribute and where everyone can benefit. I have had the opportunity to live that American dream, so I know that the president's vision is noble, I know it's real and I know it's tangible."

Gutierrez, Kellogg's CEO since April 1999, is credited with shaping a major corporate and marketing overhaul at Kellogg, narrowing the company's primary focus to cereal and wholesome snacks and reducing the company's debt. Under Gutierrez, Kellogg's net sales rose from $6.2 billion in 1999 to $8.8 billion last year, a 43 percent increase. Earnings per share increased 131 percent, from 83 cents to $1.92, and cash flow went up 82 percent, from $529 million to $961 million.

He is known as a charismatic and approachable executive, widely admired in business circles for reviving a flagging company.

"Carlos is a superb choice to head this important department and join the president's economic team," said John Dillon, a member of the board of directors of Kellogg Co. and former chairman and CEO of International Paper Co.

"He has deftly managed the Kellogg Company through both strong and weak economic currents. He understands the need for sustained economic growth and will be an articulate spokesperson and a strong member of the president's team."

Last year, Gutierrez received about $7.4 million in total compensation, including salary, bonus and incentive payments, according to a Kellogg proxy statement. He owns or has option rights to 2 million shares of company stock.

Unlike predecessor Evans, however, Gutierrez doesn't appear to be a major Republican fund-raiser or donor. He isn't one of Bush's $100,000-and-up fund-raising "pioneers" and "rangers," and isn't listed as a donor to either of Bush's presidential campaigns.

Gutierrez made $10,500 in campaign donations at the federal level in the 2003-04 election cycle, including $4,000 to the U.S.-Cuba Democracy PAC and $6,500 to Republican congressional candidates, data compiled by the nonpartisan Center for Responsive Politics shows.

be able to watch the speech through a live audio and visual feed in the Union Courtyard and Union Station.

This is not the first time UPC has had to pass out tickets, Hopper said. For example, he said, when Danny Glover visited campus, the UPC offered tickets to the free event. This was to help with crowd control, he explained.

Pelzer's speech, "Help Yourself," is based off his book by the same title, Hopper said.

"He's going to talk about taking control, being accountable and having the courage to follow through with a sense of dignity on a daily basis," he said.

Pelzer has been nominated for the Pulitzer Prize for "Help Yourself." He has written six books including "A Child Called It." His seventh book is expected to be released spring or summer of 2005.

Ridge resigns from Homeland Security position

Ridge
HOMELAND SECURITY DIRECTOR

By Katherine Pfleger Shrader
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge, whose name became synonymous with color-coded terror alerts and tutorials about how to prepare for possible attack, resigned Tuesday, saying he was confident the United States is significantly safer than before the 2001 terrorist strikes.

Ridge, who has warned that the country may face increased terror risks around the holidays and the Jan. 20 presidential inauguration, said he will remain on the job through Feb. 1. He submitted his resignation to President Bush on Tuesday morning after attending a daily threat briefing with CIA and FBI officials.

As the nation's first chief of the new Department of Homeland Security, Ridge presided over a collection of 22 disparate federal agencies and 180,000 employees. He acknowledged he could not prove the enormously expensive and complex security measures put in place since 2001 have foiled any terrorist attacks inside the United States but said he was certain America was safer.

"I am confident that the terrorists are aware that from the curb to the cockpit we've got additional security measures that didn't exist a couple years ago, that from port to port we do things differently with maritime security," Ridge said. "I am confident they know the borders are more secure. I am confident they know we have developed and are sharing information with state and local law enforcement."

Ridge said terrorists know that because of the changes, "America is a different place to work and operate in."

Among those mentioned as possible candidates for Ridge's replacement are Bernard Kerik, interim Minister of the Interior for Iraq and former New York City police commissioner, former Federal Emergency Management Agency Director Joe Allbaugh, Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Mike Leavitt and White House homeland security adviser Fran Townsend. Others are also believed to be interested in the job, including

Kansas alters drug policy

Sebelius announces Canada import plan

Kansans soon will have access to less costly prescription drugs.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius announced her decision to import prescription drugs from Canada and Europe on Tuesday.

Sebelius' decision adds Kansas to the few states involved with the I-SaveRx program, which is aimed at offering low-cost drugs to citizens.

Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich has been a major proponent of the program. Wisconsin and Missouri already have joined the program.

The I-SaveRx program provides the lower-priced prescription drugs to 26 million residents in the four states, according to a news release from Sebelius' office.

The announcement was made in Topeka to senior citizens who Sebelius said are in need of the more

Nightlife for everyone

Some local bars allow underage partygoers on certain nights

By Addie Laue
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The lights are low, the music is thumping, and the dance floor is packed shoulder-to-shoulder. It looks like a typical Friday or Saturday night at Joe's Tap Room in Aggieville.

But tonight something is different. It is a Wednesday, one of the two nights a week that Joe's Tap Room is open to the 18-plus crowd. Starting about a month ago, Joe's began opening its doors to those ages 18 and over on Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

"So far it is working out," said Matt Zenisek, a bouncer at Joe's. "We really haven't had any problems."

A few adjustments were made to allow the younger crowd inside. The bouncers mark everyone 21 years and older with a stamp and everyone from 18 to 21 with an X. Large wooden doors with a lock block the doorway that separates the two sides of the bar. Both sides are open to the 21-and-over crowd, but they have to go out to the back patio and come back in on the other side.

"We wanted half of the bar to stay 21 and over, even on Tuesday and Wednesday," said Chet Ford, a bartender at Joe's. "We didn't want to scare off the 21 and over crowd."

The less-crowded bar and shorter wait for drinks draws those of drinking age to the 18-and-over side of the bar.

Despite the new rule, the bar still attracted a considerable crowd of older patrons.

"I don't mind having the younger crowd in here at all," said Mark McGrath, 21, a customer at Joe's and a junior in construction science and management. "I wouldn't even care if it was a Friday night."

Austin Thayer, also 21 and a senior in finance, said he agreed.

"When we were 18, we had Longhorn's, and that was a lot of fun,"

See BAR Page 10

After paying the cover charge, people under 21 years of age are required to get their hands marked with a fluorescent marker so that bouncers at Joe's Tap Room can tell who is underage.

Foundation endowment down this year

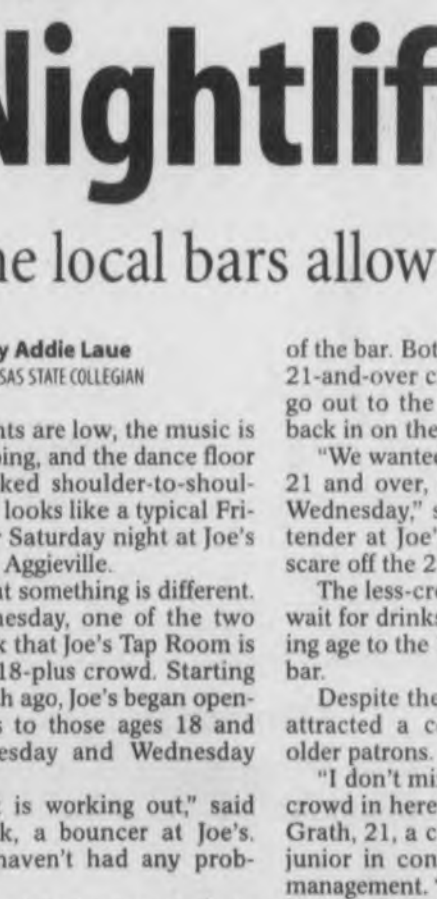
By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The roller coaster-like stock market has taken its toll on student scholarships at K-State – but the situation might be improving.

The amount of money the KSU Foundation distributed in scholarships was $6.9 million in Fiscal Year 2004, down about $800,000 in 2003.

The cuts were much less than officials expected, and the university was able to honor all awarded scholarships.

"Things are looking pretty good," Julie Lea, director of communications for the Foundation, said.



Donations to the Foundation are pooled in an endowment fund. The money gains interest, and also is subject to the ups and downs of the stock market. Scholarships are paid with the interest and dividends earned,

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

Student finds home in design studio

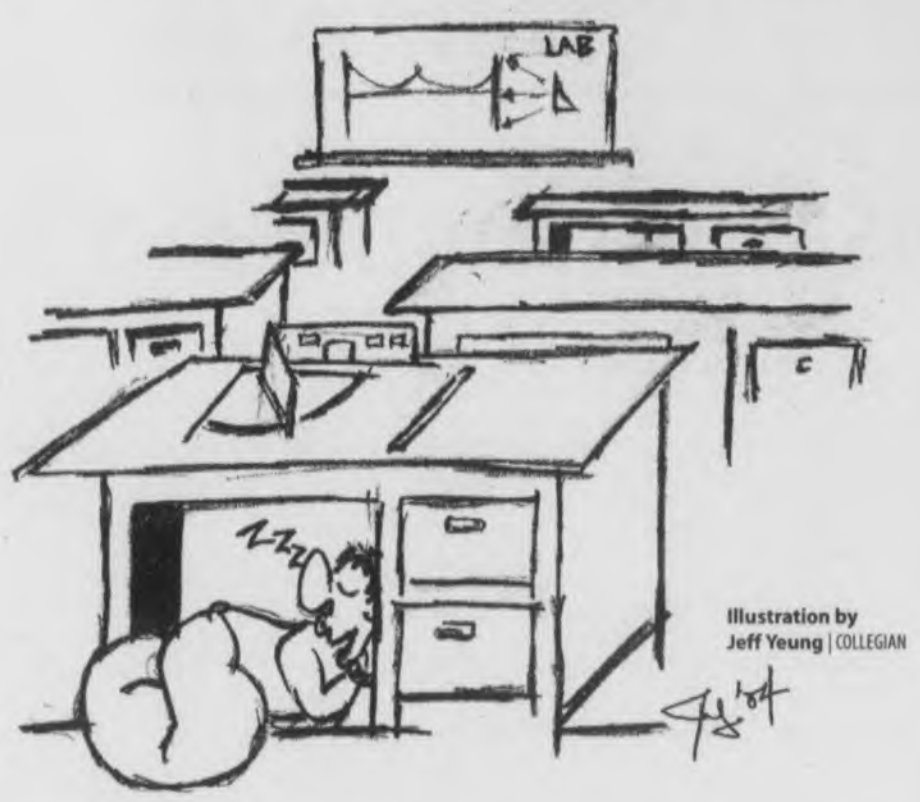

Illustration by Jeff Yeung | COLLEGIAN

PULLMAN, Wash. – Architecture students often spend a lot of time in their studios. Matthew Koch, a Washington State University senior architecture major, literally lived in his. Koch said he returned from studying in Europe a week before classes started.

When he returned, all his friends already had roommates and places to live, leaving him homeless, he said.

All architecture students have 24-hour access to Carpenter Hall. This gave the desperate Koch an idea, he said.

Koch slept underneath his desk in a sleeping bag in his architecture studio from the beginning of fall semester until mid-October, using a sweater for a pillow. He showered at the Rec Center.

Koch had to keep his living situation secret from many people because of a fear of being evicted.

"People would tease me about how much time I spent there, and ask jokingly if I lived there. I would just have to play it cool and act like I didn't," Koch said.

STUDENT CHALLENGES MPAA WARNING

DURHAM, N.C. – When Duke University freshman Elliott Wolf opened his e-mail last week and found a forwarded note from the Motion Picture Association of America, he didn't think much of it. Sure, he had downloaded some television shows, but he didn't mind that the Office of Information Technology was telling him the industry wanted him to stop. He did.

But because the MPAA warning is about television shows, which are initially broadcast free of charge, Wolf thinks the industry is on questionable legal ground. He has contacted independent activist groups to help him figure out if the same court rulings that made VCRs legal in the 1980s protect downloading.

NAME CHANGE AT MU

COLUMBIA, Mo. – Slowly, the name Elizabeth Paige Laurie will disappear from the one-month-old basketball arena, but not without a significant cost to the University of Missouri.

The Paige Sports Arena sign mounted on the exterior of the building was removed Monday, beginning the process of changing the names from Paige Sports Arena to Mizzou Arena on all signs, advertisements and merchandise.

With the UM system Board of Curators approving the basketball arena's new name on Friday, Athletic Director Mike Alden assembled an estimate of $30,000 to $40,000 drawn from the athletic department budget for changing the signs, MU spokeswoman Mary Jo Banken said.

'WINTERCOURSE'

KINGSTON, R.I. – If you ever wanted to know how to fake an orgasm or win a root-beer-pong tournament, the University of Rhode Island Student Entertainment Committee will provide the answers.

The SEC is declaring the next two weeks "Wintercourse" and sponsoring a series of sex-related events.

"We pushed the envelope a little bit, but that's what the student body wants," said SEC Recruitment and Retention coordinator Leigh Persico. "That's our objective, to please the student body."

"We have a lot of really strong programs. Something's going on every day," said Sulina Mohanty, president of the SEC Special Events Committee. "It's really crazy time coming up with exams. Wintercourse offers students something really fun to do," Mohanty said.

NEBRASKA FACULTY TO TAKE CONDUCT CLASS

LINCOLN, Neb. – After a University of Nebraska student accused a professor of sexual assault last year, university officials wanted faculty members to expand their understanding of harassment and discrimination.

Shortly after the incident last October, administrators considered requiring some faculty and staff to take an online sexual harassment course. But UNL officials expanded the program to cover a range of discrimination and harassment, said Linda Crump, assistant to the chancellor for the Office of Equity, Access and Diversity Programs.

"The course will teach individuals what constitutes harassment and discrimination – religious, racial and sexual," Crump said.

Professor researches 'flow'

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Being absorbed in one's work might produce unexpected benefits.

A psychology professor at K-State has been studying what happens to individuals when they experience flow, a state of mind that allows someone to become engrossed in their work and lose track of time.

Clive Fullagar, psychology professor, said experiencing flow is comparable to an athlete's experience being in "the zone."

"You become absorbed in what you are doing," he said. "The whole process is very enjoyable."

A balance between being challenged and having the ability to meet that challenge, often contributes to experiencing flow, Fullagar said.

"When you experience flow you are usually able to produce high quality work," he said.

Part of Fullagar's research includes monitoring fourth-year architecture students to examine their experiences with flow.

Students carry Palm Pilots with them and complete surveys as they are working on their projects, Fullagar said.

About 20 Palm Pilots have been distributed to student participants. Students are earning about $50 each for participating in the project.

The research has been funded primarily by the Distance Masses Program in Individual Organization and Psychology in the psychology department. It is uncertain how much has been spent on the project overall.

Although his research began at the beginning of this semester, Fullagar said he is already seeing results.

"We have collected some data that seems to indicate students who experience flow are more psychologically healthy and more physically healthy," he said. "Students who experience flow also tend to produce better work and they perform at an optimal level."

Matthew Knox, associate professor of architecture, said about 10 of the 13 students in his studio are participating in the project.

"They seem really interested in the topic," he said.

Although the students involved in the research project are expected to complete surveys in class, Knox said it hasn't been a problem.

"It doesn't seem to be a distraction," he said. "I think it has actually been a learning experience for me."

Fullagar said he started researching flow because of his interest in occupational psychology and wellness at work.

"I'm trying to understand what it is to produce flow and facilitate it to help people design not only architectural work, but also more traditional work so that it can offer more opportunities to experience flow," he said.

Fullagar said he hopes to use his findings to help develop different teaching and workplace methods that would help flow come easily.

"As an educator I am involved in getting students engaged in what they do," he said.

Complete data of the student surveys will be available after the conclusion of the fall semester, Fullagar said. The next step may be continuing the research to include all levels of architecture students.

After examining his findings from student surveys, Fullagar said he plans on applying for a grant from the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health.

Fast facts

You are flowing if you

- Feel challenged and excited by what you are doing.
- Are so absorbed in what you are doing that you lose all sense of time.
- Usually have a clear idea of where you are going.
- Have a good idea of how well you are doing.
- Are doing something that is highly enjoyable.

Talks begin for Town Center cineplex

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new theater could be coming to Manhattan.

Manhattan Town Center is in discussion with Warren Theatres, a Wichita-based company, to build a theater connected to the mall.

Allen Raynor, general manager of Manhattan Town Center, said nothing is certain right now.

He said the mall has wanted to add a theater for a while now.

"Theaters are good for creating people traffic," Raynor said.

Besides bringing more people to the mall, adding a theater will make the mall part of the Downtown Redevelopment, he said.

Raynor said he is excited about the prospect of Warren Theatres coming to Manhattan.

"Warren is a unique theater," he said.

"They're more that just a theater; they are truly an entertainment experience."

According to their Web site, www.warrentheatre.com, Warren Theatres have different features such as a balcony, where you have to be 21 or over, and a cry room, where people with small children can watch the movie without disturbing the rest of the audience.

Seth Childs 12 Theaters, which is part of Carmike Cinemas, will not add any incentives if a new theater is built.

"We run it the same," said Judy Russell, director of investor and public relations of Carmike.

"It's business as usual."

UNION PROGRAM COUNCIL
LEAVING OUR MARK.. ONE EVENT AT A TIME.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Long-term effects of drug plan raise costs

Prescription drugs for less money doesn't necessarily mean better health care.

American companies often are the ones that pay for the research and development of new drugs and new treatments for diseases. This costs money that can result in higher prices.

Kansas Gov. Kathleen Sebelius announced today she would allow importation of prescription drugs from Canada and Europe. The program cut costs by as much as 50 percent on qualifying drugs.

This initiative will provide cheaper drugs to those who are in need, but will unfairly take away jobs and research and development resources.

Health care and Medicare reform is desperately needed so all Americans can have access to necessary medication.

Instead of turning outside the United States, it seems politicians should be analyzing and reforming our prescription drug programs from within the country.

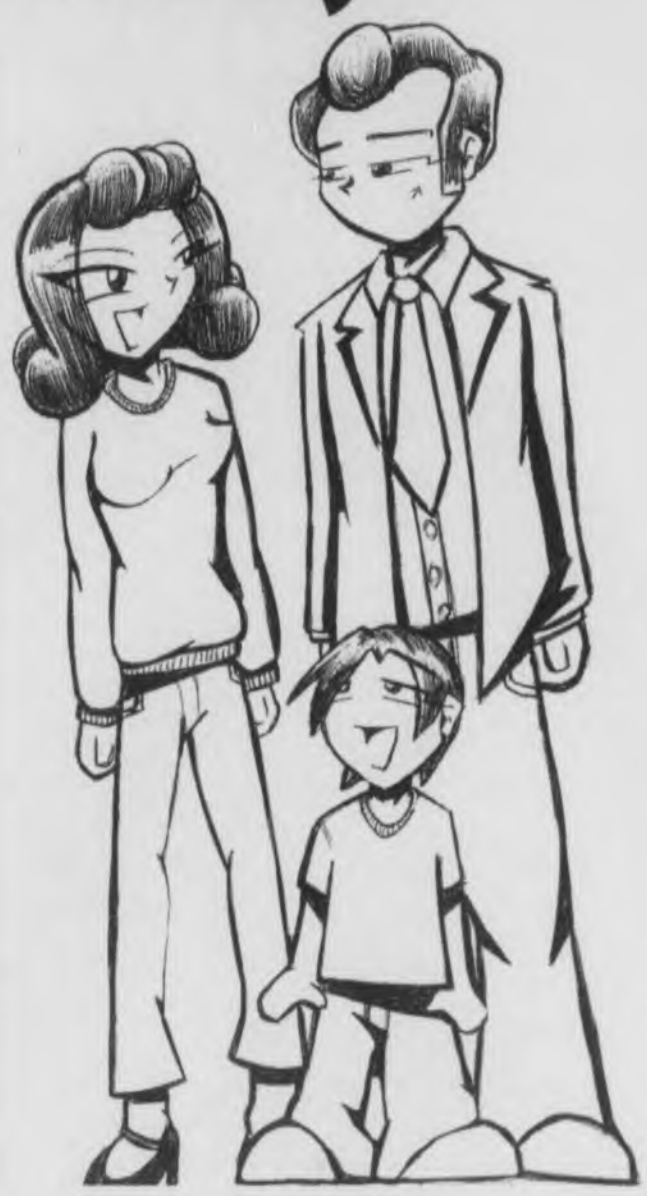
THURSDAY'S OPINIONS

SHANNA HAJEK



GRANT REICHERT

Shanna Hajek and Grant Reichert fight an all-out battle of Red vs. Blue. States, that is.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

All in the family

JAMES HURLA

"The Brady Bunch" had three boys and three girls. "Just the Ten of Us" had lots of weird kids, one of whom ate peanut butter directly from the jar.

"The Partridge Family" created a twisted, sadistic generation of redheaded musicians. What do these classic shows have in common?

Every one of them sucked, and not one of them had a big enough family for me to relate to.

As one of 10 children, there really was nothing but reality to represent what having an ungodly large family is like. Each child put up with some crappy jokes, but in the end, every one of us is better for having grown up among the other children.

The fear that an only child would grow up to have the personality of Scott Seel is enough for me to want to mass-produce children. But there are a number of other reasons having a large family beats the lonely and spoiled existence of an only child.

MENTAL/PHYSICAL TOUGHNESS

For an only child, dinner is generally a simple occurrence: fill the plate and eat the food.

When the number of children reaches double-digits, though, meals become adventures.

You learn stealth tactics to be the first one to the kitchen. Hand-to-hand combat is a necessity for survival. It's far from kill or be killed, but Cinnamon Toast Crunch is a treat – so it only makes sense to eat as much of the box as possible before your siblings realize mom's home from the grocery store.

Such skills come in useful for storing nutrients during long durations spent lost in the desert.

NO IMAGINARY FRIENDS

If you've met Scott, you certainly know he has very few real friends. Thus, as an only child, only imaginary friends could fill the void in his life.

This becomes rather embarrassing for an only child later in life when it is revealed their imaginary friend, Spencer, wore pink leather chaps and constantly told you to take off your pants.

With lots of siblings around, imaginary friends were not necessary.

In retrospect, though, it was awkward when my brother Joe insisted on wearing pink leather chaps to Thanksgiving dinner.

SPORTS

I play football with my brothers and sisters every holiday. In the summers, we have our own softball team in a local church league.

Meanwhile, Scott is left to play with himself.

LEGACY

Scott had to blaze his own trail. Mine was already cleared and had benches periodically in case I needed to rest.

My siblings consistently impressed teachers and coaches, thus giving persons of authority a positive impression of me before I ever arrived. Thus, I was able to have a little more leeway in my behavior.

Being called by the wrong name for 20 years was a small price to pay.

There are countless reasons I treasure my experiences in my large family. To try to condense its value into a few hundred words would be ludicrous, especially if I also have to mock Scott Seel in that constrained space.

The lessons I've learned from my older siblings and the lessons I hope I've taught to my younger siblings would not have been possible in a small family.

Without each of them, I could not have accomplished near the amount of goals I have, nor would I be able to dream as big as I do. I wish everyone could be so lucky.

In fact, I'm going to donate a couple of siblings to Scott so he's not forced to play with himself anymore.

James is a senior in print journalism and public relations. He respects Scott Seel as a person, but maintains Scott is a very poor Democrat. Please send comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

SCOTT SEEL

I have to give the Hurlas some credit.

Their production line of children would make Henry Ford proud.

The Hurla's are doing their part – and yours, frankly – to ensure the human race does not become extinct.

This family is probably single-handedly supporting the agriculture trade of some third-world country.

That's my goal when it comes to family planning: my family will only be as big as the food market allows.

Seriously, if you know someone who is Catholic with the surname Hurla, James is probably related to them.

MENTAL/PHYSICAL TOUGHNESS

Though I never thought I'd hear the word "tough" in regards to our good friend James, his points on this topic were laughable enough that I felt I could make an exception to my principles just this once.

I can't argue that living with nine other siblings isn't a harrowing experience, but if it is such a family structure that caused James to be the way he is today, than let me take this moment to thank my parents for choosing not to tempt fate by attempting to create another perfect offspring.

IMAGINARY FRIENDS

First off, let me say that it was wrong of James to bring Spencer into this. So he wears pink chaps every now and again. What of it?

And he only told me to take my pants off that one time. But anyways, I maintain that such friendships are very valuable components in an only child's life.

SPORTS

Check and mate. I've always wanted an all-in-the-family softball team. In actuality, James could probably form an entire league from people he is related to, as he is related to 33 percent of the people who live in northern Shawnee County and the entire city of Paxico, Kan.

LEGACY

I made my own legacy. I owned my high school. I did what I wanted, when I wanted, with no regard for the ramifications.

I will be remembered as the Great Scott Seel; James will be remembered as Joe Hurla's little brother.

I'm not hating on James' family – OK, maybe a little bit. I just think that it makes more sense in nearly every fashion to have a small family.

Really, at some point the Hurlas and their exponentially expanding family are going to join with other like-minded families in this world and overwhelm our earth.

In 200 years, when we're colonizing other planets because we ran out of room here, remember James Hurla and curse his name.

Scott is a "senior" in political science. He, too, respects James Hurla as a person, but thinks he is a one-issue Republican. Please send comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Holiday travel season begins

Holiday traffic levels boost as more Americans plan to travel

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The holiday season is one of the busiest long-distance travel periods of the year.

According to the Bureau of Transportation Services' Web site, www.bts.gov, travel is 23 percent higher around Christmas and New Year's Eve than the rest of the year. At Thanksgiving it is 54 percent higher.

Most holiday travel is to visit family and friends. According to the website, visits account for 53 percent of all travel that occurs during the Thanksgiving holiday and 43 percent of all travel during the Christmas holiday.

Lt. John Eichkorn of the Kansas Highway Patrol said with the increased amount of travel, it is important for drivers to be cautious.

"It's so important to buckle your seat belt," he said. "Crashes are going to happen, it's just a matter of when and who will be involved."

Eichkorn said eight people were killed in highway accidents during the Thanksgiving holiday, which lasted from 6 p.m. Wednesday to midnight Sunday. However, he said there may even be more.

"We work a lot of fatality crashes that occur, but not all," he said.

A wreck Sunday in Olathe, Kan., claimed the lives of Eric Richards, 21, senior in mechanical engineering at K-State Salina, and his passenger, John Fulbright, 21, of Overland Park, Kan.

In 2003 there were only two fatalities over the Thanksgiving holiday. There were seven in 2002.

Eichkorn said the wrecks occur for a number of reasons.

"It could be weather or the number of vehicles out on the roadway," he said.

"When you look at individual wrecks themselves, a lot of times it's just the way things happen."

When preparing for upcoming holiday travel, Eichkorn said drivers should be reminded of the basics.

"Drive responsibly, follow Kansas law and drive defensively and courteously," he said. "It's all of us that are taking that responsibility on Kansas roads."

Most important, Eichkorn said to be aware.

"You have to take it seriously," he said.

"Too many of us don't take driving seriously."

Club offers opportunities for med students

Students work to continue new Pre-Physician Assistant Club

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students wanting to be medical assistants have a club to join.

The Pre-Physician Assistant Club at K-State was started this year to help promote communication and understanding among pre-physician assistant students at K-State.

Gayla Adams-Wright, pre-health academic adviser, said the purpose of the club is to help club members as well as other K-State students explore the possibility of a career as a physician's assistant.

She also said they wanted students to be educated about the various professional schools and explore other subject areas.

"Wichita State is the only PA school in Kansas, but there are over 120 nation wide. WSU recently went to a graduate program (MS degree) and more and more students have become interested in this field as a career choice. It allows an individual the opportunity to practice medicine, but under the supervision of a licensed physician," she said.

The number of years in school is dramatically reduced and it is typically more conducive to family life. Students can work in primary care or they can work in medical specialties, she said.

In her opinion, K-State has nearly 60 students interested in the field, so the group was organized to help them network and promote knowledge about the field.

Any interested student can join the pre-PA club. In order to qualify as a member, a student must attend at least three meetings each semester, participate in the yearly community service project and pay club dues.

Erika Philips, club president, said there were lots of clubs on campus for students interested in becoming doctors or nurses but the opportunities for physician assistants were limited.

She said the club was started to educate people about the field and provide information to those desiring to work as a physician assistant.

A physician assistant can do everything a doctor does such as prescribing medicine or assisting in surgery but reports to a doctor, she said.

She said the club was helpful to those wanting to go into healthcare but unsure of which area they are interested in.

For more information
Students interested in joining the club can contact President Erika Phillips at erika624@k-state.edu or Adviser Gayla Adams-Wright at gayla@k-state.edu or 532-6900.

Police release more details concerning BTK killer

By Roxana Hegeman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA, Kan. – The serial killer known only as "BTK" suggests in letters that he was born in 1939 and is a railroad buff, authorities said Tuesday as they appealed to the public for clues to his identity.

Police released a summary of personal details provided in recent letters they believe were sent by the killer.

The killer – known by the self-coined nickname BTK, which stands for "Bind, Torture, Kill" – is linked to eight unsolved homicides that terrorized Wichita between 1974 and 1986. After years of silence, the killer's messages surfaced again earlier this year.

"In these letters, he has provided certain background information about himself which he claims is accurate," said Sgt. Ken Landwehr, who read a statement to reporters but took no questions.

According to police, BTK claims to have been born in 1939, making the killer either 64 or 65 years old. The statement did not say where he was born or where he lived, but that his family moved frequently and always lived near railroad tracks.

BTK's communications indicate a lifelong fascination with trains, police said.

Attention has refocused on BTK since March, when The Wichita Eagle received a letter with information on an unsolved 1986 killing. The letter contained a copy of the victim's driver's license and photos of her body.

It was the first communication from the killer known as the BTK Strangler since the late 1970s, and police said it linked the serial killer to the 1986 slaying. The other seven slayings were in the 1970s, with BTK claiming responsibility for those deaths in letters to the newspaper and a television station.

Police have received thousands of tips from the public since March.

President Bush makes official visit to Canada to discuss trade, security with prime minister

By Deb Riechmann
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OTTAWA, Canada – President Bush sought Tuesday to patch up relations with Canada after years of bickering, flying to the capital for talks with Prime Minister Paul Martin on trade, security and a host of tough hemispheric and global issues.

Bush's landing here marked the first official visit by a U.S. president in nearly 10 years – a meeting that was akin to a political dance where the president was trying to avoid any missteps that could amplify anti-Americanism north of the U.S. border.

Relations between the Bush administration and Canada got off to a rocky start when Bush, a new president, chose Mexico instead of Canada as the first country he'd visit. Trade disputes and the war in Iraq further soured the friendship.

Martin, Canada's former finance minister and a wealthy shipping magnate, however, has repeatedly expressed a desire to rebuild U.S.-Canada relations, which cooled under his predecessor, Jean Chretien. The dialogue became even more strained when Chretien decided against sending troops to Iraq – a decision supported by more than 80 percent of Canadians.

"Under Chretien, relations were terrible," John Hulsman, research fellow in foreign policy at Heritage Foundation, said of the former prime minister whose aide called Bush a "moron" in November 2002. 'It got so bad that in the Parliament one time they forgot to turn the mikes off and someone was calling Bush a bastard."

Bush will not make a customary speech at the House of Commons in Ottawa where the sometimes raucous Parliament has been known to heckle speakers. Bush's unpopularity is expected to be protested by demonstrators upset about trade issues, Iraq and U.S. efforts to get Canada involved in the continental missile defense shield and Iraq.

The two-day visit was focused on creating goodwill, but thorny economic issues were also sure to arise at the meeting between the leaders whose nations have the world's largest trading partnership. The United States and Canada do more than $1 billion in business a day; 85 percent of Canada's exports go to the United States.

Bush and Martin also are expected to talk about security on the U.S.-Canada border, the war on terrorism and efforts to expand democracy to other corners of the world.

Canada stood with France and Germany in deciding not to send troops to Iraq, but pledged $300 million for reconstruction and is helping train Iraqi police officers in Jordan. Martin is expected to offer to send Canadian observers to help oversee January elections in Iraq.

On trade issues, the two nations are fighting over a tariff the United States has placed on imports of pine, spruce and other easy-to-saw softwood lumber logged in Canada. On average, the United States adds an extra 27 cents to every $1 worth of softwood lumber imported from four Canadian provinces.

U.S. officials accuse Canada of subsidizing the lumber business, saying it does not charge companies large enough to log on public lands. Canada is challenging the tariff through international trade organizations. The World Trade Organization has sided with Canada in a series of preliminary rulings, but the dispute is far from over.

Also, Canadian ranchers are upset about the U.S. ban on live Canadian cattle that was imposed after a lone case of mad cow disease was discovered in Alberta in May 2003. The United States is Canada's biggest beef customer, and the American ban has cost the Canadian cattle industry billions of dollars.

Bush will be served Alberta beef at a dinner tonight that Martin is hosting at the Canadian Museum of Civilization.

Under a rule recently drafted by the Agriculture Department, Canada would be allowed to resume exports of certain kinds of beef. That rule will be reviewed for the next several months by the Office of Management and Budget.

The United States and Canada are working jointly on environmental issues as well as health and safety standards and regulations that won't slow down trade and economic exchange across North America, according to a senior administration official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

On Wednesday, Bush will travel to Halifax, Nova Scotia, to give a speech, thanking Halifax and other maritime provinces that received tens of thousands of Americans stranded after the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. More than 200 jetliners heading for the United States were diverted to Canada after the terrorist attacks in New York and Washington. About 7,000 people on 44 planes went to Halifax.

Raising a racquet

Students still play despite new rules, long lines

By Stacy Ryan

Waiting for a court and new equipment rules have not kept K-State students from playing racquetball at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Recently, racquetball has become a popular choice for students looking to work out.

James White, senior in interior architecture and building supervisor at the Rec Complex, said the increase can be attributed to several reasons.

"Racquetball is an easy game to pick up and play, but it still provides a good workout. Also, it is getting cold outside, and people want to find something to do inside," White said.

Nick Richmond, sophomore in biology, said racquetball is a fun and competitive way to work out, and it provides a change from regular workout routines.

"We started playing a couple of months ago. We were running and lifting weights, but then we got tired of running, and we were looking for something else to do," Richmond said.

Richmond said he usually goes to play with a group of four or five friends, and they try to go almost everyday.

Michael Dalsing, sophomore in electrical engineering, said most of the time many of the courts are in use, but the ones that are available can't be used because of a lack of racquets.

Because of the high number of damaged racquets the Rec Complex has instituted a new set of rules for checking them out. The racquets are closely inspected for any damages both when they are checked out and returned.

"The new rule hasn't really had an effect on the number of players. The number of damaged racquets has gone up, but part of that is because we have to be so picky when we look for damage," White said.

Richardson said he thinks the new rules are a good idea because the racquets are in better condition.

"The racquets are decent and the new rules help to keep people from breaking them," Richardson said.

While the new rules and time spent waiting for a court can be an inconvenience, Dalsing said students continue playing because the overall experience is positive.

"The large number of courts is good, and except for minor repairs like flickering lights and doors that need to be fixed, the overall facilities are good and provide a nice place to have a good time and play," Dalsing said.

Success of men's basketball team rests on Massey's shoulders

The K-State men's basketball team revolves around senior forward Jeremiah Massey.

MATTHEW GIRARD

The 6-foot-7, reigning Big 12 Conference Newcomer of the Year is the leader of this team, but if the Wildcats want to improve their win total from last season, Massey needs to step up and play like a leader.

Although Massey is averaging 15.5 points and 6.25 rebounds per game through the first four games of the season, his play in the first half of each ball game has been far from leader-like.

So far, Massey is only averaging 5.25 points and two rebounds in the first half of games, and his lack-luster performances have trickled down throughout the team.

The Wildcats have trailed at halftime twice and have only broken the 30-point mark once heading into the locker room.

In the first half of Monday's 76-42 win over Arkansas-Pine Bluff, Massey got off to a slow start once again, scoring just five points against a team that was 1-26 last season.

Yes, the Wildcats pounded the Golden Lions by 34 points and yes, it was K-State's third game in six days. But Massey should have dominated the game and showed that this is his team and that he is willing to do everything he can to help its success – no matter who the opponent is.

Massey didn't register a rebound until the second half, stopped in the middle of a play to put his shoe back on and, after missing a lay-up, laid on the floor as the Golden Lions went the other way and scored in transition.

This is not the type of play you would normally expect from a team's key player.

After the game, Coach Jim Wooldridge said the Wildcats cannot have some players play to their potential and others not, especially Massey.

"We are going to have to have a lot of guys play well and play up to their abilities as we go now into the next week," Wooldridge said.

"He (Massey) got off to a slow start and we can't afford to have that happen much more."

K-State has seven non-conference games left, including games against Wyoming, Rutgers and Central Missouri State, which is plenty of time for Massey to take charge of this team before opening the conference schedule on the road Jan. 8 against Nebraska.

The bottom line for this season is where Massey goes, the Wildcats go.

Basketball | Pair picked as CLASS Award nominees

On Monday, senior forward Kendra Wecker and senior guard Laurie Koehn were nominated for the fourth annual Bayer Advantage Senior CLASS Award.

Wecker

The pair was among the top 30 male and female college basketball players picked to be in the running for the award which goes to the nation's top senior Division-I player of the year.

The list will be narrowed to 10 finalists in February. Then, during the NCAA Tournament in March, nationwide fan balloting and voting from the media and coaches will determine the male and female winner.

Football | Notre Dame fires Willingham after 3 seasons

Coach Tyrone Willingham was fired by Notre Dame on Tuesday after three seasons in which he failed to return one of the nation's most storied football programs to prominence.

Willingham

Willingham went 21-15, including 6-5 this season. The Fighting Irish lost 41-10 to No. 1 Southern California on Saturday.

Players are considering not playing in the Insight Bowl on Dec. 28, and White said he didn't know who would coach the game. Notre Dame accepted the invitation to the game on Sunday.

Willingham's firing comes after a season in which the Irish pulled off upset victories over Michigan and Tennessee but also were beaten badly by USC and Purdue. Student groups were planning a protest on campus Tuesday evening to call for Willingham's firing; he faced criticism from fans much of the season.

Football | Barnett named Big 12 Coach of the Year

Nine months after he was suspended by his own school, Colorado coach Gary Barnett was named Associated Press Big 12 Coach of the Year on Tuesday after leading his troubled program to the conference title game.

Barnett

The Buffaloes (7-4) took the Big 12 North title by winning their last three games and getting a little help. They will play No. 2 Oklahoma on Saturday for the championship.

Colorado has posted a startling turnaround since the program was hit by a sex and recruiting scandal last spring.

After starting 3-0 in non-conference play, Colorado lost four of five to start the Big 12 season and looked absolutely lost in a 31-7 loss to Texas. But Colorado rallied for a come-from-behind 30-21 win at Kansas, a 38-31 victory over Kansas State and a 26-20 win at archrival Nebraska last week.

NFL | Vermeil says he will be back next season

The coach who made "burnout" a part of sports lexicon is 68 now and enduring one of the most disappointing years of a long, distinguished career.

Vermeil

But there are no thoughts of another retirement for Dick Vermeil, who said Tuesday he'll be back next season for the final year of his contract with the Kansas City Chiefs.

Expected to be a Super Bowl contender after posting a 13-3 regular-season record last season, the Chiefs are a miserable 3-8 and on a four-game losing skid. There are no playoff games looming on the postseason horizon, only big changes on the field and possibly in the front office.

But Vermeil, who walked away from the Philadelphia Eagles in 1982 citing emotional exhaustion and "burnout," said he's determined to be back.

Frequent Flyers

Artists, bands alike work to make creative, visually stimulating promotional items for musical events

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of the most profitable promotional moves – in terms of what a band can do – is to post eye-catching flyers on every possible light post and telephone pole.

Emporia artist Josh Finley has been playing for local bands the last six years. He's done artwork for them and other bands in the area. The two bands he plays with most are Loco Macheen and the Dewayn Brothers.

"I've always been a helper for bands," he said.

He's done work for more than 30 bands, including Hank Williams III, the Rev. Horton Heat and Split Lit Rayfield.

"Any chance to work with Spit Lip Rayfield is pretty exciting," he said.

Doug Buseman, guitar player for Pins and Needles, graduated in 2002 from K-State with a degree in graphic design.

For Buseman, his most impressive creation is the band's Web site, www.pinsandneedlesband.com.

"It took so long, and I've never seen another one like it," he said. "When you don't have another Web site to compare it to, it's all trial and error. It took a year to make."

He said the flyers, like Pins and Needles' music, are more of a dark art and include a lot of collage, montage and various images that are surreal.

"Some of the images might look like an ordinary photo, but you take an extra look at it you'll see extra things on it," Buseman said. "It could be disturbing, or it could be easy to look at, but it's something that'll stick in their heads; so if they're passing and see different imagery than there used to then maybe they'll think about it more."

J.D. Hillen, vocalist for Copus and senior in digital art, does the artwork for his band.

He said his influences are H.R. Geiger, who created the alien for the "Alien" movie series; "Spawn" artist Todd MacFarland and Alex Grey, who does work for Tool.

His ideal job as a graphic artist would be working in his home town.

"If I had my choice I"d be playing music 24/7," he said. "But I'd really like to do graphics work in Kansas City or Web design work so I can work from home."

Hillen has been doing digital art since high school. He took a digital art class that designed graduation programs.

"It was more of a real-world situation publication," he said of the class. "We were a team trying to accomplish a goal."

Buseman's career goal is to do artist-relations work.

"Not only an album cover but also do the Web sites and other promotional stuff," Buseman said. "They'll come up and basically say, 'We want you to do the look of our next album.' Have kind of an all over aspect with larger, signed bands that people are familiar with."

He started out at K-State as a business major, hoping to run a music-related business after graduation.

"I took art all through high school," he said. "I kept doing drawing and design.

"Finally after one year I said 'This isn't for me, I want to do graphic design.'"

Finley, a self-taught artist, said his three biggest influences are Robert Crumb, Salvador Dali and Brandon Jacobs. He said his artistic style comes from many different places.

"I reckon just different styles of cartooning," he said. "A lot of everything: surrealist, realist and mix it all together.

"I definitely have the ability to draw something realistically, or I could draw a dumpster as a cartoon dumpster."

Finley said he sees the connection between his work and his bands' music as an unpredictability.

"The main connection between my art and my bands: Loco Macheen and the Dewayn Brothers, is that Loco Macheen can be all kinds of styles, and my art can be all kinds of styles," he said. "I might do a flier that looks like something from Iron Maiden, or it could look like a Calvin and Hobbes comic."

He does the work for the bands based on his own inspiration more than anything.

"I ask them for input, but I do it on my own," Finley said.

"I'll bring by drafts and ask which they like better."

Bisexual 'Alexander' irks some in Greece

Alexander the Great, who carved out a vast empire east of Greece before his death at age 32, has been idolized by the Greeks.

So when Oliver Stone's new epic about the life of the conqueror depicted him as having bisexual flings, the portrayal hit a nerve in Greece.

A group of 25 Greek lawyers has threatened to sue the movie's producers over what they describe as a distortion of history — but insist the protest is not aimed at gays.

"I want to stress we have nothing against gays or lesbians. We respect their rights as everyone else's," said Yiannis Varnakos, the head of the lawyers' group.

"We would have reacted the same way if the issue didn't involve homosexuality," he said. "We just don't want a distortion of historical facts."

The lawyers are calling on the filmmakers, Warner Bros., to carry a disclaimer that the movie is a fictional portrayal of Alexander's life.

'Jeopardy!' whiz ends 74-game win streak

"Jeopardy" whiz Ken Jennings finally met his match after a 74-game run, when he lost to a woman whose own 8-year-old daughter asked for his autograph when they first met.

As someone who always has prepared his own tax returns, Jennings was tripped up in Final Jeopardy by the answer: Most of this firm's 70,000 seasonal white-collar employees work only four months a year.

The correct reply: "What is H&R Block?" But Jennings guessed Federal Express, ending his remarkable run as the biggest winner in the TV game show history with a haul of $2,530,700.

Iraqi violence claimed 135 troop deaths in November

By Mariam Fam
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – A suicide bomber detonated a car packed with explosives next to a U.S. convoy on Baghdad's dangerous airport road Tuesday, and several casualties were seen lying next to a damaged vehicle, witnesses and authorities said.

In the northern town of Beiji, a car bomb exploded near a U.S. patrol Tuesday, killing four Iraqi civilians and injuring 19 people, two of them American soldiers, the military said. Another soldier from the 1st Infantry Division was wounded when insurgents fired a rocket-propelled grenade at a tank south of Beiji.

The attacks came as the military announced that a U.S. Army soldier died from injuries suffered after a roadside bomb exploded late Monday next to his patrol north of Baghdad, bringing to 134 the number of American troops killed in Iraq this month, according to an unofficial count.

This makes November the deadliest month for the U.S. military since last April when 135 troops died.

Fierce fighting in Fallujah and insurgents' counterattacks elsewhere in Iraq have fueled the high death toll this month.

Amid the violence, interim Prime Minister Iyad Allawi prepared to travel to Jordan to meet with Iraqis living outside the country to encourage them to take part in the Jan. 30 election in a bid to woo support away from the insurgency.

In the suicide attack, police Capt. Talib al-Alawani said a bomber drove his car into a U.S. convoy on the airport road, scene of near daily attacks against U.S. military and Western targets.

The U.S. command confirmed that the attack occurred but had no further details.

Several casualties were seen lying next to a damaged vehicle, according to an eyewitness who arrived on the scene before troops sealed off the stretch of road where the blast occurred. A military ambulance drove up minutes later to evacuate the casualties.

The highway, which multinational troops use daily to commute between the military base at the airport and Baghdad's center, is considered one of the most dangerous roads in Iraq.

The British Embassy announced Monday that its staff would no longer be permitted to travel on the road.

In Beiji, a U.S. military statement said the attacks occurred about 9:10 a.m., but it did not give the condition of the wounded nor specify whether the car bomb was a suicide attack.

Palestinian leader orders halt on media

By Mohammed Daraghmeh
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RAMALLAH, West Bank – The interim Palestinian leader has ordered government-controlled media to halt broadcasts of material that could incite hatred against Israel, Palestinian officials said Tuesday.

The directive by Mahmoud Abbas meets a key demand by Israel, which has long accused the Palestinian media of fomenting hatred, and adds to the tentative signs of goodwill that have emerged since the death of Yasser Arafat on Nov. 11.

Radwan Abu Ayyash, head of Palestinian radio and television, said that at the request of Abbas, widely known as Abu Mazen, he has instructed all departments to make sure they don't broadcast inflammatory material.

"Abu Mazen asked us to be sure that the material we broadcast does not contain any material that could be considered incitement," he said.

Israel has long complained of incitement in the Palestinian media, citing fiery anti-Israel broadcasts by Muslim preachers and programs praising the killing of Jews. It blamed Arafat for the objectionable content.

A senior Israeli official cautiously welcomed the reported gesture but said the government was waiting to see changes in the Palestinian media.

"Everything will be judged according to performance," the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity. "If this happens, I can tell you that the Palestinians are very serious."

A Palestinian broadcasting official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said efforts are already under way to revamp programming.

He said officials are reviewing material and planning changes once a 40-day mourning period for Arafat is over. Meantime, he said, programming is limited to subdued material about Arafat.

The official said talk shows would now be recorded and edited rather than being broadcast live.

Mosque preachers would be asked to avoid incitement in their sermons that are broadcast live on Palestine TV and radio.

"We have to record these kinds of shows, and to take out the offensive material," the official said. He also said old PLO fighting songs praising revolution and sacrifice would be taken off the air.

The new programming rules are largely symbolic. Most Palestinians don't watch state television, preferring to tune in to livelier content on Arab satellite stations like Al-Jazeera, al-Arabiya or Lebanon's Middle East Broadcasting Corp.

Still, the move is likely to boost the spirit of reconciliation.

Israel has signaled it is ready to work with Abbas but is wary of openly welcoming him in the run-up to the Jan. 9 Palestinian presidential elections. Abbas is widely considered the front-runner.

Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon already has pledged a number of gestures to Abbas, saying he is ready to meet with the Palestinian leader and coordinate a planned pullout from the Gaza Strip with the Palestinians. Sharon refused to negotiate with Arafat.

Sharon's plan has run into danger in recent days, due to infighting with partners in his coalition government.

The prime minister has approached the opposition Labor Party with a tentative offer to join his shaky coalition in hopes of avoiding early elections and saving his Gaza withdrawal plan, Labor officials said Tuesday.

BAR | Despite cover for underage bargoers, students enjoy opportunity

Thayer said. "I think it's great to be able to share Aggieville."

There were plenty of patrons under 21, and most were female.

"I heard about the 18 and over night from the Collegian," said April Jacobs, 20 and a senior in psychology.

"And I heard about it from friends," Jamie Bowman, also 20, said, pointing to Jacobs. "We plan on coming here every Wednesday night with the crew."

The group the women were in was a mix of those under and over 21.

"I think that it is great that they can come out with us now," said Aly O'Donnell, 21, who came with Jacobs and Bowman.

Jacobs said the only drawback was the cover charge of $5 that everyone under 21 must pay.

"It seems like a lot," Jacobs said. "I wouldn't mind it so much if it was just a couple bucks cheaper, but it seems worth it tonight."

How long the bar will continue to have 18-and-over nights is still undecided.

"It is working out right now," Ford said. "But whether or not we will continue to do it is still up in the air right now."

FOUNDATION | Investments drop after post-1990s recession

while the original donation is untouched.

The Foundation's returns on endowed funds were about $3.6 million below what was needed, largely because of investments made during the boom of the late 1990s.

Alan Klug, Foundation vice president for administration and finance, said the bull market of the 1990s led to increased donations, some of which went into endowment funds.

However, the affluence of the late 1990s ended, and the nation entered a recession. Many investments dropped below the value of the original donation.

"In mid 2000, the market tanked," Klug said.

The number of funds below market value has improved from 805 in 2003 to 509 in 2004.

Those funds were expected to provide $40.3 million, but only yielded $37.7 million.

Despite this $3.3 million shortfall, student scholarships are at about the same level as they were in 2000, and all scholarships that have been awarded will be honored.

"The university deserves some accolades for that," Klug said.

Klug said K-State is not alone in its troubles with investments, and in fact remains as one of the universities that has fared best in circumstances.

Preliminary numbers in an informal survey of Big 12 and Big 10 universities, Klug said K-State had the second-best performance for its endowment funds.

K-State's ability to honor all its scholarships speaks well of its administration and donors, Klug said.

"They should be commended," he said. "To me, that is a good example of what K-Staters can do."

affordable drugs.

"We must make health care and life-sustaining prescription drugs more affordable for seniors and hardworking Kansans," Sebelius said. "After carefully reviewing the I-SafeRx program, I'm convinced it will help tens of thousands of Kansans safely obtain the medicine they need at prices they can afford."

The program will save an average of 25 to 50 percent on the cost of qualifying drugs.

The announcement comes nearly a month after Sebelius' HealthyKansas initiative to make health care more affordable. When the HealthyKansas initiative was instituted, Sebelius said she would look into the I-SaveRx program.

Ron Riley, pharmacist and owner of Candlewood Health Mart Pharmacy, said the program could be detrimental to the companies in the United States.

"If your governor wants to send business not only out of the state, but out of the country, it makes me wonder what her thinking is there," Riley said.

"I realize it's complicated, but it doesn't seem right."

RIDGE | Director says department works to give public sufficient info

Asa Hutchinson, undersecretary for border and transportation security in the Homeland Security Department.

At a news conference, Ridge defended the department's efforts to warn the public of possible terror threats, saying it preferred to disclose more information than some officials believed was wise.

"That's something we take pride in," Ridge said. "America is prepared to deal with the reality of the post-9/11 world. It's in our best long-term interest to share more information about the threat to America rather than less."

Ridge, who is married with two children, said that for the future he intends to "raise some family and personal matters to a higher priority," including attending his son's rugby games.

In an e-mail circulated to Homeland Security officials, Ridge praised the department as "an extraordinary organization that each day contributes to keeping America safe and free."

Ridge became the nation's first White House homeland security adviser, leading a massive undertaking to rethink all aspects of security within the U.S. borders after Sept. 11, 2001.

Local political parties reflect, plan for future campaigns

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Elections may be over, but for national political groups, it is only a matter of time before they start revamping political strategies and electing new officials into office.

In Riley County, it is no different.

With no seats in county government offices, the Riley County Democrats are looking at their losses and planning a strategy for a better future. The group re-elected Kathryn Focke as county chair.

As chair, she organizes monthly meetings and helps plan campaign strategy for the county. Focke also appoints special members of her executive board, including the K-State student seat held by a member of Young Democrats.

K-State Young Democrats are a vital part of the political party's success, she said.

"Students help work down at the headquarters and canvassing door to door," Focke said.

And while the Republicans hold all the seats in the county office, they also are working hard to maintain their edge in the political arena.

Though Riley County Republicans were not available for comment, Rachel Olds, College Republicans president and junior in political science, said they are working hard with keeping their ground on campus and in the county. This year, College Republicans have been working close with Riley County Republicans, including the new Republican Chair, David Lehman.

"One of our biggest projects together was the House of Representatives campaign for Paul Barkey," she said. "We helped drop literature around town about candidates," Olds said.

Olds said she tries to keep her organization active, hosting as many events as possible, including a voter registration drive.

"We actually held a big voter registration drive for four days, getting 300 people registered

Student works to help fight against cancer

By Sara Sandock
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jessica Fritz is a lot like any other college freshman.

But Fritz, freshman in open-option, recently found out her friend's boyfriend from high school had been diagnosed with colon cancer.

Fritz's friend told her about her boyfriend Chad's diagnosis. Chad's name has been changed because he's kept his diagnosis private.

Jessica only met Chad this summer but got to know him very well through her best friend. Chad lives in Wichita and has taken a year off from school for personal reasons.

"He is really awesome, easy-going, and is always looking out for other people; he has a really big heart," Fritz said. "He is the bravest, strongest and especially the most selfless person I have even had the honor to meet."

Chad's mother died two years ago from colon cancer. A few months ago, Chad's father was diagnosed with a form of lung cancer. Chad has also lost many other close friends and family members within the past few years.

Chad had taken a $2,000 test for cancer earlier this year and got the results back about a month ago. The results indicated he had colon cancer.

He spends about $400 every two weeks to buy chemotherapy pills to shrink the growth in his body so surgery can be performed, Fritz said.

Fritz said because of the history of medical problems in his family, Chad's financial woes are troublesome. The insurance company dropped Chad's insurance plan after supporting his mother's medical expenses.

"Chad is too weak to work, and his money is dwindling," Fritz said. "He is having to sell his vehicle in order to help pay for all the newly acquired costs, and this is a big deal for Chad, who is an avid car lover."

Jessica is trying to do everything she can to help support her friend, even though he has no idea that she even knows of his diagnosis.

"He doesn't want anyone to know about his cancer and has only told a few people; he doesn't want anyone feeling sorry for him," Fritz said.

Jessica and her boyfriend have been brainstorming fundraising ideas and have come up with numerous ideas,

U.S. forces in Iraq set to expand in January

By Robert Burns
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – The United States is expanding its military force in Iraq to the highest level of the war – even higher than during the initial invasion in March 2003 – in order to bolster security in advance of next month's national elections.

The 12,000-troop increase is to last only until March, but it says much about the strength and resiliency of an insurgency that U.S. military planners did not foresee when Baghdad was toppled in April 2003.

Brig. Gen. David Rodriguez, deputy operations director of the Joint Staff, told reporters Wednesday that the American force will expand from 138,000 troops today to about 150,000 by January.

The previous high for the U.S. force in Iraq was 148,000 on May 1, 2003, when President Bush declared that major combat operations were over.

The expansion in Iraq will be achieved by sending about 1,500 troops from the 82nd Airborne Division in Fort Bragg, N.C., this month and by extending the combat tours of about 10,400 troops already in Iraq.

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld approved the moves Wednesday, according to a Pentagon statement.

Fort Riley women receive cars won during season premiere of 'Oprah'

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two Fort Riley residents drove home new cars Wednesday afternoon from Briggs Auto Group.

Lisa Dorenbush and Kathy McDowell drove home the 2005 Pontiac G6 cars they won when they attended the season premiere of "Oprah" in Chicago.

McDowell said they had no idea they would get a prize.

"We thought we were just going to see Oprah," she said. "That was exciting enough."

Dorenbush and McDowell were two of 276 audience members who received cars. They got to choose what color they wanted, and the cars are worth about $28,000.

"It's very exciting, because I didn't expect it. It's such a surprise," McDowell, who chose a granite metallic colored G6, said. "I love Oprah more than ever now."

"I was completely surprised," Dorenbush, who chose a liquid silver, said. "I've never won anything before."

When they found out, they promised not to tell anyone, both said.

"We told my dad as soon as we got back," Dorenbush said. "We had to tell somebody."

They also told their husbands, who were serving in Iraq.

McDowell said her husband, Darryl, called to make sure she got back from Chicago all right, and that's when she told him.

Dorenbush said she had to wait for her husband, Jarret, to call her.

"He was very happy, very surprised," she said.

They didn't, however, tell their neighbors.

Beth Moore, who lives in between Dorenbush and McDowell and drove them to Briggs, said she didn't find out until the morning of the premiere, when her mom called her.

She said her mom was listening to Rush Limbaugh and found out from there.

"I was so excited for them," Moore said. "They're really great people, so it couldn't have happened to better people."

McDowell and Dorenbush said they are going to personalize their license plates to thank Oprah. McDowell's is going to say THANKUO, and Dorenbush's will say THANKSO.

John Gaidos, general manager of Briggs, said the G6 cars are new and replace the Grand Am model.

"We're thrilled that some military spouses got to be involved in the winnings," he said.

DIVERSIONS

A WASTE OF TIME — BUT HEY, IT'S BETTER THAN A LECTURE

It's a trend sweeping campuses across the nation: TheFaceBook.com is gaining more and more users each day.

Among the many features on the site is the 'Groups' section, in which numerous K-State students join together based on common interests, living situations, sports and countless other factors. As of Wednesday evening, there were 371 different clubs for K-State listed at TheFaceBook.com.

Here is a small sampling of the many groups K-State students have formed and joined:

1 | THE ANTI-POPPED COLLAR CLUB

117 members

If there's something to unite the students of K-State, few would immediately cite disdain for people who pop the collars on their jackets.

But for the members of this club, it is a mission.

Under the description of the group, it states members "want to put an end to all this popping and the evils of the world that accompany it."

The group's leadership consists of four officers thus far, including 'El Presidente keeper of mirth' and 'Secretary of Sass.'

Courtesy art

39 members

With a small but very loyal following, Comedy Central's hit animated comedy — "Aqua Teen Hunger Force" — has established its fan base online via TheFaceBook.com.

Many of the fan group members have adopted character names as their officer titles.

While the backgrounds of the group members vary, they do have some unifying traits: 15 of them are also members of a procrastinators group on the site.

3 | GREEK AT KSU

Just as the Greek population at K-State is significant, so is the Greek group for K-State on TheFaceBook.com.

How big is the group? Not only are there close to 400 members representing about all of the Greek organizations affiliated with K-State, but the group also has a half dozen "groupies" — members of the site who are friends with many people in the group.

Touting two Party Liasions and one member as 'Beer Police' among the group officers, the Greek at KSU group is used to message its massive membership concerning parties, other groups of interests and letting others know about sub-leases available for out-of-house fraternity and sorority members.

Courtesy art

4 | I PAY MORE IN PARKING TICKETS THAN TUITION

9 members

"Do you feel like you have paid more money in parking tickets than your actual tuition cost? Have you been violated for being parked slightly on the line? Or better yet do you know someone who continually gets away with violations?"

So asks the small but organized revolt on TheFaceBook for students tired of seeing those little yellow envelopes under the windshield wipers of their cars.

If anything at all, the message board allows members to vent their frustrations with Parking Services and bemoan their economic situation.

5 | KEN JENNINGS FAN CLUB

23 members

Another group going through not-so-happy times now is the Ken Jennings Fan Club for K-State members of TheFaceBook.

The "Jeopardy!" whiz, who recently ended his game show reign after more than 70 consecutive wins, "is the man," according to group members.

Reactions to Jennings' loss on the message board have been almost unanimous. One user wrote, "I think Jeopardy just turned worthless again since it just lost the best thing that happened to them." Another opined, "I'm so sad, is there a purpose anymore?"

Web sites facilitate book sales, purchases

By Caleb Amyot
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students commonly complain about purchasing books for classes.

Inflationary prices, plummeting re-sale values and the strong market share enjoyed by traditional college bookstores are trends of late within the textbook industry, affecting students at K-State and abroad.

Two Web sites offer alternatives to buying books at local retailers: Ksubooks.com and Switchtextbooks.com. These Web sites have questioned a market environment as old as many of the universities and colleges they serve.

A recent study conducted by the National Association of College Stores estimated the wholesale cost of textbooks has increased 35.1 percent since 1998, with some market segments experiencing around $900 per year in individual textbook expenses alone. This has left many students discontent over the current price levels, according to a USA Today article.

Ksubooks.com, introduced in spring 2004, is an independently owned and operated message board service developed by Brett Beem, Ross Wilson and Branden Comfort.

The Web site offers an user-friendly interface that enables students to post descriptions and communicate textbook trades/exchanges with other registered users. A quick registration process and disclosure of an e-mail address are the only requirement for full access to unlimited trading.

Co-founder Ross Wilson said the inspiration for the site's development was to create a fairer market for students.

"There is no good medium of service for (textbook) buybacks," Wilson said.

Wilson and Beem said that it is the traditional bookstores and publishing companies that have led to the inefficient market and price structure.

"Anytime you can get rid of the middlemen is advantageous to consumers," Beem said.

Support costs have remained low enough for the site to remain a free-of-charge service offering, which was the result of the decision to use free software licensing for Open Source, a computer software product by phpBR, Inc.

What remains certain is that in order to grow, the owners will have to open their own pocketbooks in order to expand.

Unable to afford proper promotion and the inability to match book listings with teacher demand are two underlying factors hindering the popularity and awareness of the site among the student body.

With 904 current users, the owners maintain reservations about their ability to properly advertise to a larger student constituency.

According to Beem and Wilson, their attempt to advertise the site on campus failed due to KSU Bookstore's relationship with the campus, further noting the K-State Student Union required them to pay an exorbitantly high fee for a booth in the courtyard.

Both said they believe the fee to be a result of Varney's Bookstore's ownership interest in KSU Bookstore located in the Union. Varney's is family owned and has been working with Supporters of Ukraine's Premier and presidential candidate Viktor Yanukovich wave blue balloons Wednesday during a rally in downtown Donetsk, the center of the Russian-speaking eastern region. The Regional Parliament in Donetsk voted to hold a referendum Jan. 9 to make Ukraine a federation. Ukraine's parliament voted to oust the country's pro-Moscow government as European and Russian mediators took a second stab at trying to quell a political crisis raging in the strategic country.

Election controversy continues

Dave Pelzer, author of "A Child Called It," speaks Wednesday evening in the K-State Union Ballroom. Pelzer has had a number of books on the The New York Times Best Seller list throughout the past few years.

Last night in the K-State Student Union Grand Ballroom, hundreds of students gathered to listen to the humorous and inspirational words of Dave Pelzer.

"How the hell are ya?," Pelzer asked as he introduced himself at his first visit to K-State.

Pelzer is the author of six inspirational books, including New York Times best seller, "A Child Called It," as well as two other works that have been nominated for the Pulitzer Prize.

Pelzer's books come from insight he gained from the traumatic abuse he received as a child, dealt by the hands of his mother.

"I read his books, and I wanted to come see him speak, because I know a lot of people who have been abused," Bonnie Brown, Manhattan resident, said.

Throughout the speech the audience would transition from hysteric laughter to silence as Pelzer incorporated humor throughout the speech.

He impersonated California governor Arnold Schwarzenegger while making points.

"Men, solve your problems now. Never go to bed pissed off at a lady," Pelzer said.

Pelzer spoke about the traumatic things his mother did to him as a child.

"My mother did not allow me to speak in the house for years," Pelzer said.

His mother would put cigarettes out on his head, and she would hold his arm on the burner of a gas stove, he said.

"Life is not fair. Crawl on glass if you have to. Life is not pretty, it is not fair," Pelzer said.

His mother is now deceased, and for the last 21 years he has been speaking out about abuse and counseling abused children.

"Ninety percent of your problems are right between your ears," Pelzer said.

Clark Griffiths, event organizer, said plans were made for overflow seating after the event sold out all its tickets. There were 125 people in Union Station, and more than 300 people in the Union Courtyard watched Pelzer's presentation via video.

K-State students and faculty, Manhattan residents and people of all age groups attended.

Emily Meissen, senior in mass communications, came with members of her sorority.

"We already had a lot of members that were coming, so we decided to come to this instead of chapter. It is a really important issue, and we like to support events on campus," she said.

"I wanted to come see him speak because I read 'A Child Called It' in Kelly Welch's human development class," James Fox, senior in human resource management, said.

Pelzer said his experience serves as an example for others.

"If you do not deal with your past, your past will deal with you," Pelzer said.

Ukrainian opposition scores victory in talks

By Anna Melnichuk
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KIEV, Ukraine – Ukraine's opposition scored key victories Wednesday in its bid to scrap a disputed presidential election as parliament voted no confidence in the government, and European-brokered talks provided momentum toward holding a new ballot.

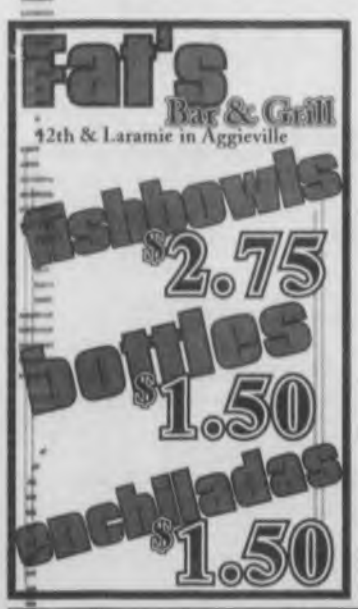
Opposition leader Viktor Yushchenko urged throngs of supporters to stay on the streets until plans for what he demanded – a rerun of the Nov. 21 runoff with Kremlin-backed Prime Minister Viktor Yanukovych – are worked out. He said such a vote could be held as early as Dec. 19.

But President Leonid Kuchma, who backed Yanukovych, instead proposed an entirely new election, which would allow his Russian-allied government to field a more attractive candidate as it scrambles to stay in power with his 10 years in office running out.

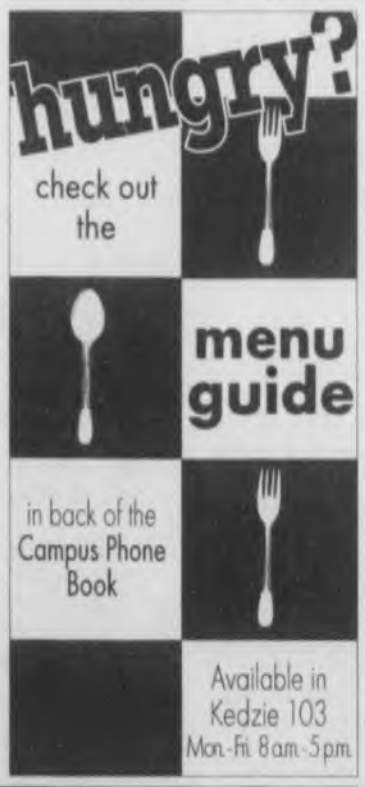
European Union foreign policy chief Javier Solana, who mediated talks Wednesday between Yuschenko and Yanukovych, also suggested a new vote but didn't indicate whether it would be a repeat of the runoff or a new election. Kuchma, who earlier in the day called the idea of a new runoff "a farce," also left the issue unclear.

The two candidates signed a deal to set up a group of lawyers to work out proposals for the "completion of the election," a reference to drafting legislation for a settlement of the dispute. The statement also urged protesters to lift their siege of official buildings that have paralyzed the government's work – but Yushchenko urged his backers to press ahead with their street protests.

"Our ranks mustn't shrink," Yushchenko told tens of thousands of his supporters who gathered on Kiev's central Independence Square for the 11th straight night since the election commission declared his rival the winner in a vote he says was stolen. "We mustn't leave until we have a revote date firmly set."



Hours after the deal was signed, throngs of Yushchenko's supporters continued to besiege the Cabinet and the presidential administration buildings, while thousands clad in his orange campaign colors crammed the central square under fireworks and listened to rock bands in a raucous celebration.



Yushchenko said he expected the Supreme Court to deliver a ruling Thursday on his campaign's appeal to invalidate the runoff result – based on claims of widespread violations across Yanukovych's eastern and southern strongholds.

Yanukovych has tried to counterattack by launching his own appeal contesting the vote results in pro-Yushchenko western provinces and the capital, but it wasn't immediately clear when the court would address it.

The opposition has asked the court to declare Yushchenko the winner based on his narrow edge in the election's first round, on Oct. 31. But his call for a revote suggested he does not believe the court would pronounce him the winner.

Yushchenko, Yanukovych and other participants in the talks in the Mariinsky Palace presidential residence emphasized the need to prevent actions that could split the country.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

Thinking in red and blue

Republicans throughout 'Jesusland' defend issues

GRANT REICHERT

Shifty, shifty blue – the most deceitful of all the primary colors. Really, how many trustworthy Smurfs do you know? Zero.

The color divide in this country between wholesome, apple-pie red and soulless, dissolute blue couldn't be starker. Democrat strongholds persist on the West Coast, anchored around the People's Republic of California and in the terminally-liberal New England area.

But in between, it's a gory mess of Republican red. In the last election, more people voted in favor of a red country than there are citizens in the yellow country, France.

These red states in flyover country have been derisively nicknamed "Jesusland," a land of ignorant, sister-marryin' homophobes hopped up on the word of God, with more children than teeth. It's obviously an unfair caricature, given that 75 percent of red staters agree cousins are where it's at.

Hop on the wagon (cue banjos) and let's take a quick tour of Jesusland, via some hot button topics.

First stop, Abortionsville, population: not the fetus anymore.

Red staters generally abhor abortions. A child aborted is one less child to fetch daddy an ice cold Pabst when he's lounging on the couch in tighty-whities waiting for NASCAR to come on.

Abortion also has the NARALian paradox to contend with: aborting a female fetus violates that fetus' right to have an abortion. I just can't condone an activity that would deprive future generations of the right to an abortion; it's just cruel, that.

What's that you say? Restricting abortion would lead to a black market of unsafe back-alley abortions with clothes hangers? Hold that thought for a second; it's really a perfect segue to our next topic, gun control.

As the saying goes, outlaw guns and only outlaws will have guns. Or, as with abortion, outlaw guns and then outlaws will jump you in back alleys with just a clothes hanger. Doesn't death by clothes hanger sound much worse than death by gun shot?

Thing is, no matter what laws are passed, guns will always be with us, just like marijuana or Sean Connery. And this doesn't have to be a bad thing: guns + marijuana + Sean Connery = one helluva party, I'd assume.

Or, if you prefer facty-type stuff to parties, the Fraser Institute, a Canadian think tank (oxymoron?), wrote in a 2003 news release about a study it conducted:

"Disarming the public has not reduced criminal violence in any country examined in this study. In all these cases, disarming the public has been ineffective, expensive, and often counter productive. In all cases, the effort meant setting up expensive bureaucracies that produce no noticeable improvement to public safety or have made the situation worse."

So much for gun control. Now let's move on to our last stop on the Jesusland Express: welfare.

The inhabitants of Jesusland have a love-hate relationship with welfare – love to receive, hate to not receive it. Unlike food stamps, welfare cash can be exchanged straight up for a carton of Marlboros, the latest issue of "Animal Husbandry" (with centerfold!) and an economy-size bottle of mullet degreaser.

But, politically, Republicans generally dislike any expansion of welfare, because it acts as a disincentive for people to find work, and is largely antithetical to the American ideals of individualism and self-reliance.

Red staters are keen on voluntary giving, rather than the theft by taxation an extractive welfare state entails. According to the 2004 Generosity Index, compiled from 2002 tax return data by The Catalogue for Philanthropy, the top 25 most generous states were red states, that is, states that Bush won in the election.

That's it for this tour of Jesusland. Don't forget to visit our gift shop. You don't want to be the one explaining to St. Peter at the Pearly Gates why you lack a Messiah bobblehead, do you?

Gun control policy among reasons to despise GOP

SHANNA HAJEK

After the presidential election, my mom and dad came up with a revised story of my birth in which I had a Siamese twin. After the doctors separated us, my parents found they could only keep one. They said they thought they picked the Republican. Boy, were they wrong.

The presidential election was interesting. In this case, I'm using the bad connotation of the word "interesting." President Bush's re-election made me think about just why I dislike the Republican party so much.

Please note: I didn't say "why I dislike Republicans so much." I don't hold my parents responsible for their horrifying political affiliation. They've obviously been brainwashed. Living in Kansas, right next to a military base, makes it difficult to be anything but Republican.

My biggest problem with the Republican Party is its stance on abortion. I realize this is a hot-button issue. I'm sure I've raised some hackles just mentioning the word. But I'd love to know why a bunch of balding, paunchy, 50-something men feel like they can tell our country's young women what to do with their bodies.

I realize there are congresswomen and female senators. But you have to admit, the overwhelming majority of Republican representatives are men, and they are in opposition to abortion. If anyone is to tell a woman what she can and can't do with her body, it should be another woman.

And gun control! If I had a nickel for every Republican-affiliated gun-nut out there... well you get the idea. For some reason, our president doesn't believe gun control is necessary, as we saw when he allowed the Assault Weapons Ban to expire.

Many people who are pro-gun like to cite the Bill of Rights in their stance against gun control, which is completely ridiculous. When the right to bear arms was written into the Bill of Rights, our country was in the process of freeing itself from Britain. That doesn't apply now.

We no longer have to worry about the British raiding our homes. If you're still worried about it, you should see someone about that. I will admit the idea of defending one's home against criminals is appealing. But that's not why many guns are sold. Many of them are sold to criminals and drug dealers.

If gun control is eliminated completely, it won't make our country any safer. In fact, it will likely make things more dangerous.

Also, I simply do not understand the Republican stance on welfare. What's so bad about helping people in poverty? I know some of these people. They're not the type of lowlife most Republicans envision when they think of welfare.

The people I know who require government assistance work very hard. They work harder than a lot of people. They don't want to be on welfare, but it's a necessity.

I won't name names, but I know someone whose biggest problem with welfare is the fact that some people just live off of it and don't even try to get a job. They don't want their hard-earned money going to support people like that.

Well, you know, that's why former President Clinton signed into law the limit on welfare assistance. Ta-da, problem solved! None of the Republicans in opposition to welfare whom I know are donating their money elsewhere.

I know that not all Republicans are evil. My parents aren't. They just chose the wrong team. They haven't realized it yet, but I'm sure they'll come around after President Bush's second term is over. As for me, I'm just going to try to be a little more tolerant. In writing at least.

Time will tell of Arafat's influence, good or bad

Editor,

Yasser Arafat's death raises crucial questions about the future of the Middle East. Whatever one's opinion of him, one cannot deny that he played a pivotal role in the epic saga of Israeli-Palestinian relations. But what about the peace process? Will the Palestinians be granted an independent state?

Is an Israeli-Palestinian war inevitable? Emeritus Princeton professor Bernard Lewis, an eminent authority on Middle Eastern history and politics, wrote in a recent Wall Street Journal column that the question, among other things, is whether Israel's "very existence" is legitimate. The legitimacy question seems ex post facto to me, like asking whether the United States is a legitimate nation or a colony of Great Britain.

The Palestinians want an independent nation, but the establishment of a Palestinian state would likely lead to a declared war with Israel (and if history is any indicator, Israel would win handily, since they are the region's superior military power).

Indeed, the question is how inspiring Arafat was. If he was a truly inspiring leader in life and death, then the Palestinians will challenge Israel directly in a sort of gentlemen's duel.

On the other hand, if he was the terrorist that many claim, his mark on history will be violence and his legacy short-lived, but costly.

Tragically, the prospect of Middle Eastern peace currently seems as much a mirage as an oasis in the middle of a desert. Unfortunately this holiday season, we are unlikely to have "peace on earth."

Columnist's mother weighs in on family size issue

Editor,

Hi James! As Scott Seel's mother, and the mother of the only child in question, I felt the need to respond.

First of all, in reality, Scott, although biologically an only, was raised with two cousins around all the time (still not measuring up to the 10 you can boast!) as we virtually raised both my nephew and my niece. But Scott did have to blaze the trail.

Imagine though, for a minute, what my poor niece experiences every day following Scott Seel through Washburn Rural High School: "You're Scott Seel's cousin? Oh my god..."

And, for the record: Scott's imaginary friend is "My Bob." Not Bob, mind you, but "My Bob."

Finally, in some cases, one is enough.

James and Scott – this is all tongue in cheek, you know.

Leaders confident about Iraqi elections

By Mariam Fam
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Iraq's president, an influential Sunni Muslim, threw his support Wednesday behind holding the Jan. 30 election on time despite insurgent threats he said have paralyzed voter registration in some Sunni areas of the country.

Suicide bombers targeted U.S. and Iraqi forces Wednesday on the road to Baghdad airport and near a bridge south of the capital – grim reminders of the perilous security situation.

U.S. troops fought a half-hour gunbattle with insurgents in the northern city of Mosul, and one American was wounded. Clashes also occurred between U.S. troops and insurgents in Samarra, 60 miles north of the capital, wounding three Iraqi soldiers and two civilians, Iraqi officials said.

A militant group, meanwhile, claimed it had abducted and killed three Iraqis who worked for the U.S. Marines in Ramadi, saying in an Internet posting that Iraqis who cooperate with U.S. forces will face the same treatment as if they were Americans.

Iraq's interim Prime Minister Iyad Allawi met Iraqi Sunni tribal leaders in Amman, Jordan, trying to drum up support for the election, which is seen as vital for building a democratic government in Iraq. Allawi ruled out meeting leaders of the insurgency but conferred with figures who are influential in Sunni regions of central Iraq where insurgent violence has been fiercest.

Insurgent attacks have raised concern that voting will be impossible in some areas of central and northern Iraq, and leading Sunni clerics have called for a boycott to protest the U.S.-Iraqi offensive on Fallujah and the continued American military presence.

That prompted several key Sunni Arab politicians to call for delaying the balloting by up to six months to buy time to resolve the security crisis and persuade Sunni clerics to drop their boycott call.

However, President Ghazi al-Yawer, who wields considerable influence among Sunni tribal figures, told reporters in Baghdad he opposed any delay.

"I personally think that there is a legal and a moral obligation to hold elections on the set date," he said. "Legally and morally, we have to abide by the date set for the elections in the country's administrative law" which mandates a ballot by the end of January.

Al-Yawer acknowledged security in some Sunni areas has disrupted preparations for the election, in which Iraqis will choose a national parliament to draft a permanent constitution.

"There are areas in Iraq where the security situation is very bad," he said. "There are areas where no one has been able to give out even one voter registration sheet."

In Mosul, an American military group touring the city to discuss election preparations came under rocket-propelled grenade and small arms fire Wednesday, according to witnesses.

One American soldier was wounded in the gunbattle that followed, witnesses said. Mosul's 5,000-member police force disintegrated during an insurgent uprising last month, forcing the U.S. command and the interim government to divert troops from the offensive in Fallujah.

Elsewhere, three people were wounded Wednesday in a roadside bombing on Baghdad's airport road, one of the most dangerous routes in the country, Iraqi officials said.

The explosion occurred at the same place where a suicide bomber rammed a U.S. military convoy Tuesday, wounding several soldiers and destroying two Humvees.

Last week, U.S. Marines, British troops and Iraqi commandos launched an operation to clear guerrillas from towns and villages along the major highway linking Baghdad with Shiite cities to the south.

U.S. officials said Wednesday the Pentagon has decided to send elements of the 82nd Airborne Division from Fort Bragg, N.C., and extend the tours for other units already in Iraq to bolster American forces for the January election.

At least two Army brigades now in northern Iraq will have their tours extended by two months, until after the election. And about 2,000 Marines also will stay longer than planned.

TEXTBOOKS | Despite fee, study finds students still interested in site

K-State since 1890.

Varney's owner, Steve Levine, declined to comment.

Ksubooks.com remains optimistic in regard to their priority of getting the word out, Beem said. He said there are no regrets for undertaking the venture and plan to continue the service for some time.

While Ksubooks.com struggles to maintain a competitive edge, Patrick Nagle, president and co-founder of Baltimore Solutions Inc., was enthusiastic about the long awaited roll-out of the firm's Switchtextbooks.com.

"(It's a) fully functional site, up and ready to go, able to trade freely," Nagle said.

To participate in the service, customers must pay a $19.95 membership fee that is good for two semesters or a year and only after the book is located on the site itself. Once the membership fee is paid, the user may then trade, sell, and receive freely from other users.

"One successful transaction for $19.95 is a winner," Nagle said.

In an effort to measure the site's ability to meet student needs, a market survey was conducted by BSI at Powden University that asked 500 students if they would use the service. Nagle reported that an 82 percent acceptance rate was found among the survey participants.

BSI and Nagle also conducted market research through its affiliate site, Ratemyprofessor.com, that rendered an estimated 30,000 new members within the first year of operation. Nagle said this is a 30,000 population based on a 1 percent demographic rate.

BSI's internal numbers show that 10 to 13 million students will be reached by 2010, and will be subsequently linked across a university and college network of more than 4,000 schools.

"Students want to receive, not give. How do we get away from a one to one system? (A)huge nationwide network," Nagle said. "(We) need to work together to create a network that helps the students."

Wildcats to take on Cal State Northridge

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's volleyball team plays its first-round match of the 2004 NCAA Tournament at 7 tonight (5 p.m. PT) against Cal State Northridge in Los Angeles.

The No. 23 Wildcats are making their ninth-straight tournament appearance with a 19-10 record.

The Matadors are 17-10 and finished fourth in the Big West Conference. They're led by first-team conference selection outside hitter Jen Ryan, who averages 5.18 kills per game. Setter Nadine Nickel leads the team with 12.4 assists per game and libero Jessika Hammerich averages 4.58 digs per game.

If K-State advances, it will play the winner of the Southern California versus College of Charleston match. Southern California is the two-time defending NCAA champion and has a 19-5 record. The hosting Trojans received a No. 8 seed, meaning the selection committee deemed them the eighth-best team in the country.

Coach Suzie Fritz said even with Southern California in the bracket, the Wildcats cannot overlook the Matadors.

"I don't care about USC right now," Fritz said. "We need to focus on Northridge right now – one team, one team only, and then the next night if we get a chance to play again, then we'll worry about USC. If we get an opportunity to do that, I feel like we have prepared ourselves with our preseason and our conference scheduling to have a shot, and that's all we want."

K-State is not seeded. In

Football | Coaches pick 3 Cats to All-Big 12 teams

Three Wildcats earned spots on the All-Big 12 Conference coaches' football teams released on Wednesday.

Sproles

Senior running back Darren Sproles, junior offensive lineman Jeromey Clary and senior tight end Brian Casey were named to the coaches' second team offense.

Five Wildcats received honorable mention: senior defensive tackle Jermaine Berry, senior defensive end Kevin Huntley, junior defensive tackle Derek Marso, senior place-kicker Joe Rheem and freshman punter Tim Reyer.

It was the third time Sproles was picked to the coaches' All-Big 12 teams. He was first team in 2003 and second team in 2002.

Casey was an honorable mention selection in 2003, while Clary was a first-time pick this season.

Tennis | 4 Wildcats ranked in ITA Central Region

The women's tennis team is well represented in the first ITA Central Regional rankings.

Rosenberg

The recently released rankings list senior Maria Rosenberg, junior Jessica Simosa and freshmen Tamar Kvaratskhelia and Olga Klimova as among the top collegiate players in the region.

Rosenberg, currently second on the K-State career singles wins list, is ranked No. 7 in the region after a 12-7 fall season singles record.

Ranked No. 9, Kvaratskhelia is the highest freshman on the list. Kvaratskhelia had an outstanding fall season, as she compiled a 15-2 singles record after starting the season 11-0.

Wildcat doubles teams are also represented in the rankings. Kvaratskhelia and Rosenberg have the No. 5 spot in the region, and Simosa and Klimova are the No. 12 doubles pair in the region.

K-State begins its spring season against Drake on Jan. 22 at Cottonwood Racquet Club.

Seniors ready to write final chapter of legacy

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ninety wins. Four NCAA Tournament appearances. One conference championship.

The numbers just tell part of the story of the legacy left by the four seniors to the K-State volleyball program. But with their final NCAA Tournament beginning tonight with a first-round match against Cal State Northridge, that story is not yet finished.

Outside hitter Michaela Franklin, setter Gabby Guerre, outside hitter Vali Hejjas and middle blocker Lisa Martin played their last home match Saturday, beating Missouri. They said they agreed that playing in front of the fans at Ahearn Field House will be what they remember most about playing at K-State.

"I'll remember Ahearn, the crowd, the people, the fans and all the tradition here," Martin said.

The list of accolades for this year's class is long, with last season's Big 12 Conference title at the top. These Wildcat seniors also have received recognition for their play on the court and work in the classroom, including the recent selection of Guerre and Hejjas to the All-Big 12 first team and Martin as honorable mention.

But it's not the honors and on-court success that has meant the most to this group. Guerre said this season has been about being there for each other as a team.

"I think our sense of team and our sense of loyalty to each other has been a really big part of this year," Guerre said. "We had so many freshmen coming in and making sure everyone felt included and didn't feel homesick, for us to feel like we were people they could come to was really important to us."

Even though they will not return to Ahearn, there could still be plenty of season left for the Wildcats. They will try to add to that 90-win total starting tonight.

Guerre said a big key for being successful come tournament time is maintaining focus.

"I think at this point you really

Football | White named Big 12 top offensive player

Oklahoma quarterback Jason White on Wednesday was selected as The Associated Press' Big 12 offensive player of the year for the second straight season in voting by reporters who regularly cover the league for newspapers in the seven states with Big 12 teams.

White

He joins Texas' Ricky Williams, who won the honor in 1997 and 1998, as the only two-time selections.

Texas linebacker Derrick Johnson was selected as the conference's defensive player of the year, Oklahoma running back Adrian Peterson was picked as the league's offensive newcomer and Colorado linebacker Jordan Dizon was named the defensive newcomer of the year.

White received 15 of the 20 votes for offensive player of the year, with Texas running back Cedric Benson receiving three and Peterson receiving two. Johnson and Peterson were unanimous picks.

Give Cat fans an Ahearn game

MICHAEL ASHFORD

An untapped gold mine is sitting right here on campus, and K-State's Department of Athletics needs to wake up and make use of it.

For years, I have heard stories of what it was like when K-State basketball was held in Ahearn Field House.

Back in the days when Jack Hartman, Tex Winter, Jack Gardner and Cotton Fitzsimmons patrolled the sidelines, K-State basketball was a national powerhouse. The Wildcats amassed an incredible 377-86 record at Ahearn. It is still considered one of the most storied venues in all of college basketball.

The mystique surrounding Ahearn still echoes of those coaches and players who made K-State basketball great.

Many students at K-State, including myself, were never fortunate enough to experience a game in Ahearn.

Bramlage Coliseum opened in 1988, and K-State basketball hasn't really been the same since.

I've been a Wildcat fan all my life, and I would like nothing more than to experience a game inside Ahearn Field House. Many other K-State fans feel the same way, and that is why the men's basketball team should play one game each year in Ahearn.

Does the athletic department know how much this would mean to thousands of K-State fans, not to mention there is a ton of money to be made?

I don't pretend to know the inner workings of how much it would cost to make this happen, but I have to think the athletic department could make a lot of money with this.

Just think of how many K-State fans, young and old, would pay a ton of money to be able to relive or experience the Ahearn magic.

The demand for tickets would be outrageous.

There are a lot of K-State alumni who want to revisit the days when Chuckie Williams, Mike Evans, Bob Boozer,

Basketball tournament to honor Indian culture

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This weekend marks the first Flint Hills All-Indian Classic Men's and Women's Basketball Tournament and Powwow.

The theme of the event is "Indigenous Strength and Beauty: Celebrating Our Legacy Through Dance and Sport," and the weekend is aimed at showing the Native American presence on campus through interaction with the K-State and larger community.

There are two main events taking place this weekend, including a basketball tournament from 7 to 10 p.m. on Saturday at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and a powwow from 1 to 6 p.m. on Sunday in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Rhondalyn Peairs, adviser for the Native American Student Association (NASA), said the two events were organized because of their significance to the Native American culture.

"We chose basketball because most ball games that are played are indigenous sports and have Native American origins," Peairs said. "The powwow is a traditional social gathering and time for dance."

Peairs said NASA has been working with other

Racing | Expansion begins at Kansas Speedway

Construction began at Kansas Speedway this week to add 1,500 seats, and the track's president said they will keep adding on if demand for ticket remains strong.

The new seats will boost the grandstand's capacity to nearly 82,000, good news for race fans on a waiting list for season tickets.

The new seats are above the entry to turn one and make up three new sections in the front-stretch grandstand.

The expansion is the second since the speedway opened in 2001. A 1,500-seat expansion in 2003 brought the track's listed capacity to 80,187.

Winterdance starts tonight

Many styles on display tonight

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It is about self expression, the beauty of movement and tons of hard work.

For a semester, the K-State Dance program has prepared for the annual Winterdance performance. Winterdance, which will feature an array of dance styles, begins at 8 tonight.

"This will be a very diverse show of dancing," said Julie Pentz, assistant professor of dance.

Pentz said Winterdance performance is interesting because it is not like a musical or a play. Instead, Winterdance is composed of varied dance pieces.

One of the things students in Winterdance struggle the most with is time management.

"I've had to learn that when I come to dance practice, I focus on practice. I can't get worried about outside work when I'm trying to dance," said Sarah Dean, sophomore in biology and criminology.

Despite the grueling practices, Dean said she has found dancing to be very rewarding.

"There really is a lot of gratitude to work on something all semester, and then finally get to showcase the work. It's really a way to be proud of your work," Dean said.

Winterdance also will feature the work of guest artist Paloma Braggioto, who will dance on two original pieces.

Pentz said one of Braggioto's pieces, "Prairie Concerto," combines Hispanic folkloric dancing, ballet and modern dance.

"Paloma's piece is very character driven. The costumes for the piece are very lacy and colorful, and the dancers wear ballet slippers. The piece has three movements," Pentz said.

Pentz also said the Winterdance is great preparation for the dance festivals later in the year and a helps open dancers' eyes to the world of dance.

"Not only are the festivals good for the dancers, but for the faculty it is a way for us to refresh and mingle with professionals and other dancers," Pentz said.

Julie Johnson, sophomore in kinesiolgy, said Winterdance is a great way for students to see how others express themselves.

"I'm not a dance major, but I love to dance. I love to express myself through dance.

"The Winterdance is a great way for people to see how others express themselves without words. It's about movement," Johnson said.

Monett McKeeman, junior in kinesiology, rehearses "Autumn Carthsis" during dress rehearsals in Nichols Hall. The dancers rehearsed twice to make sure everything was as good as it could be for tonight's performance.

Manhattan eateries need international flair

One thing all humans have in common is the love of eating.

WILL KLUSENER

We're also very curious, and the need for new experiences courses through our veins like a gargantuan shot of adrenaline.

I love to eat out as much as the next person, and in fact, I go to dinner with a group of friends every Sunday. We go to one of three places, and no one can ever agree because one of us is always sick of the place the other wants to go.

This leads me to wonder: Why is there such a pronounced lack of international cuisine in Manhattan?

You may say there are plenty of restaurants in Manhattan from which to choose. To that I say, "nay."

Though there are many restaurants, there are only a few choices, and I'll explain why.

Whiskey Creek, Applebee's, Chili's and Amarillo Grill all basically offer the same dried-out, insipid, cookie-cutter food. If you've eaten at one, you've eaten at them all.

We have two Mongolian BBQ joints now: a Thai restaurant and a plethora of Chinese eateries. Mongolian BBQ and Chinese, though in some ways different, are essentially the same. The only real choice you have is how fresh you want it.

And let us not forget our beloved fast food chains, which I despise (I personally think these companies are in bed with the likes of Jenny Craig and Weight Watchers), but at which I am forced to eat when nothing else is open and my cupboard is bare.

This brings me to my point: Manhattan needs more international cuisine.

True, Junction City has Japanese and Korean restaurants, and also the German Village (which is usually open only during lunch) and Gasthaus Erika (which I fear may have closed), but that's just too far to drive for most people.

With a military base a few miles away and a university chalk full of international students, it seems ridiculous that I have to drive to Topeka or Lawrence to enjoy some Tandoori chicken.

How about Russian? Why can't I have some delicious buglama or veal galushki?

And where can I get an authentic, freshly baked chicken cordon bleu, or some pot au feu?

If I want fresh Norwegian lutefisk (ok, I understand that no one wants pickled herring) or Swedish meatballs, I must drive to Lindsborg, Kan.

Manhattan is a college town, and according to the U.S. Geological Survey, a small, metropolitan area.

One would like to think that a town this size and this full of open-minded students could support a couple more restaurants.

After all, what is a metropolitan area without international representation?

'Suge' Knight eyed in Vibe Awards brawl

Police and probation officials have been reviewing video of the melee at the Vibe Awards show to determine if rap producer Marion "Suge" knight played a role in the altercation.

Knight has denied any involvement in the incident in which a man struck Dr. Dre twice, sparking a brawl in which the attacker was stabbed and seriously injured.

Dre, whose real name is Andre Young, met with authorities Monday at the Santa Monica police station and demanded that his attacker, Jimmy "James" Johnson, be charged with assault and battery.

Knight was released from prison in 2001 after serving time for assault and weapons violations and the conditions for his parole ban him from having any content with Dre.

Knight entered the awards show without an invitation and sat just a few feet behind Dre, who was receiving a lifetime achievement award.

Hanks, Howard reunite for 'Da Vinci Code'

Tom Hanks will reunite with director Ron Howard to star in "The Da Vinci Code," the film adaptation of Dan Brown's best seller dissecting the origins of Christianity.

Production will begin next year, and distributor Sony Pictures said Tuesday it plans to release the film May 19, 2006.

"The Da Vinci Code" will mark Hanks' third collaboration with Howard and his producing partner Brian Grazer. The three previously worked together on "Splash" and "Apollo 13."

Lucas donates $100,000 to film program

"Star Wars" creator George Lucas donated $100,000 to California State University-Long Beach, for film department scholarships and equipment.

Lucas

Lucas donated the money at the request of the Department of Film and Electronic Arts. Although Lucas attended the University of Southern California, director Steven Spielberg, his close friend, went to Cal State Long Beach.

The university needed the money to fix or repair equipment damaged by an October storm. A satellite dish on the department's building fell through the roof during the storm, allowing water to seep into the building.

The department may not have been able to restore damaged cameras, projectors and videotape machines without the Lucas donation, department chair Craig Smith said recently.

The scratch cards have coupons and can be sold door to door. When you scratch off the cards, there are prices underneath ranging from 75 cents to $3, Fritz said.

"When people agree to take part in the fund-raiser, whatever they scratch off they have to donate. It's not that much money," Fritz said.

When people choose to donate they are given a sheet of coupons including anything from tire services to fast-food savings.

"No donation is too small; just the change from people's pockets would make a world of difference," Fritz said.

Jessica said she would love to have anyone interested help her fundraise, give speeches to organizations or simply make donations to Chad.

Fritz has already begun organizing a speech to give to various organizations on campus and has recently made a presentation to Kappa Delta sorority.

to vote."

Efforts like these are what keeps the Republican Party ahead of the game, she said.

Although the Democratic Party has done a lot this year, Focke said there is still a lot to do with redefining the Democrat image.

"The main thing we are going to do now is just get more people registered to vote and run for office," Focke said. "We will work more now grooming the image of our party for the next election."

Focke believes the majority of election losses for Democrats, including the national elections, were due to voters' morality concerns. Some of the Democratic candidates were not as prepared to handle those debates and issues were not handled as best as possible, Focke said.

In the last election, Bill Kennedy, Riley County attorney, was the only Democrat to hold a county office.

"Two of our candidates came close to winning office," Focke said.

But close isn't close enough, according to Focke.

"I want to develop our activities, membership and message," Focke said.

Yet, Steven Smethers, vice-chair of Riley County Democrats and associate professor of journalism and mass communication, said there is much to be proud of for the Democratic Party.

"We gained a lot of votes within the state, and two of our local representative seats were won by Democrats," Smethers said.

"We will work more now grooming the image of our party for the next election."

Kathryn Focke
RILEY COUNTY DEMOCRATIC

In future elections, Smethers would like to see Democrats run for every public office on the city, county and state level. Interest, however, is sometimes limited, so their group is working on keeping an eye out for potential candidates.

"The county Democrats were so small that we could fit into a small car over two years ago," Focke said.

Now, the Riley County Democrats have 50 active members in the party. She said the support has and will continue to grow.

"Every man, woman and child can find something to relate to with the Democrat party," Smethers said. "I think Democrats are doing an excellent job in representing people and issues that really matter, including education and health care, not wedge issues. The Democrat party holds true to enhancing the value of life."

"Of course Democrats are concerned about the Republican dominance in the state," Smethers said. "But we are just going to have to keep ourselves close to our values with the party and identify with the voters."

women's volleyball, the NCAA only seeds the top 16 teams. The rest then are placed in the 64-team field in a setup similar to the NCAA basketball tournament.

The Big 12 Conference is well-represented in the tournament, tying the Big 10 Conference with seven teams receiving bids.

Fritz said she was not surprised at the large selection of Big 12 teams.

"Having played in the conference this year, there is no doubt in my mind that it is the most competitive year, at least in my time here, from top to bottom," Fritz said. "I'm glad the committee took the strength of our schedule and competition into consideration."

Fritz said she hopes her team finds the consistency it searched for during an up-and-down season. The year saw K-State drop two of its last three matches before finishing strong last Saturday, sweeping a Missouri team now seeded No. 16 in the tournament.

"If we win those two matches then we might be the 16th seed," Fritz said. "I take responsibility for what happened the last two weeks. We had a significant win, we also had a significant loss, and I think both of them affected us greatly.

"I hope that how we played on Saturday night will be what affects us most down the road. We were great, we played great volleyball and I really strongly felt like we were hitting our stride a little bit, and I think that more than anything that will carry us into the tournament."

have to stay hungry, because a lot of people that are in the tournament that are wanting to do well are people that have been named all-conference or were conference champions," Guerre said. "You have to stay hungry and not lose sight of what you're after."

Hejjas said keeping that focus is easier when the Wildcats are playing with confidence, something she said the seniors can help with, because they have experienced the pressure of tournament play before.

"You have to keep your confidence," Hejjas said. "Even if you're not comfortable doing something, you need to be focusing on the next play. It's pretty hard to do it if you're in a game and you're down 1-0 or 2-0. It's pretty hard to change that kind of thinking, but you have to be able to do it, because it's do or die."

"It's especially hard for the younger players. The seniors, even if we don't feel confident, we can show it to the younger players and once you start to show it, you can get it."

If they can do that this postseason, there are even more impressive numbers on the way for this group.

COLUMN | Hoops game should be held in Ahearn

Rolando Blackman, Mitch Richmond, Jack Parr and other K-State greats held court in the "Old Barn" and made Wildcat basketball one of the best programs in the country.

I would be willing to bet there are thousands of students who want to know what a game in Ahearn felt like. I doubt more than a handful of students on campus ever went to a game in Ahearn, but I know there are many who wish they had the opportunity.

A single ticket to a game in Ahearn could cost five times what they are now, and I guarantee they would sell out.

K-State fans packed Ahearn when it was open, and they would do it again for the chance to relive the memories of a time when K-State basketball was truly something special.

Why not give the fans and the team a chance to go back in time once a year?

Crowds have not been very good at Bramlage, but if the athletic department scheduled a game in Ahearn, fan enthusiasm would skyrocket, and it would be a boost to the program.

With K-State basketball working its way back up to respectability, what would be better than a little push in the right direction?

A game in Ahearn would do just that.

Bring back the "Old Barn" magic for one game a year. The ghosts of Ahearn are calling.

multicultural student organizations on the event, and they are encouraging participation from as many people as possible. She said 55 tribes from Nebraska, Missouri, Oklahoma and Kansas have been invited to the event.

Along with celebrating Native American culture Peairs said another goal was to get the general public involved and offer a learning experience.

"We want as many people as possible to attend and share the celebration.

"Both events are free and open to the public; we're offering this as a learning experience and chance to see the cultural arts by showcasing Native American culture and celebrating heritage and diversity," Peairs said.

PETA asks Applebee's to review suppliers' slaughter procedures

Rights activists file shareholder resolution

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Animal rights activists have asked the Applebee's restaurant chain to change how its meat suppliers slaughter chickens.

People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals on Wednesday filed a shareholder resolution with Overland Park, Kan.-based Applebee's International Inc., asking the company to conduct a feasibility study on "controlled atmosphere killing" for its chicken suppliers. PETA said it will formally present the resolution during Applebee's annual shareholder meeting in May.

PETA, which said it owns 142 shares of Applebee's stock, said the suppliers now hang the birds upside down and stun them with an electric bath before cutting their throats or dunking them in hot water to remove their feathers. The group said the electric bath often doesn't adequately render the birds unconscious, leading to what it called "a horribly cruel death."

In controlled atmosphere killing, the chickens are put to sleep with an inert gas, such as nitrogen or argon. PETA said this is easier on workers and could be cheaper than the current method.

A spokeswoman for Applebee's, the nation's largest casual dining chain with more than 1,600 restaurants, said the company had yet to see the request yet and therefore couldn't comment.

Ringing for riches

Volunteers bring human face to holiday charities

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Twenty years ago, Alice Gomez couldn't afford to buy enough groceries for her two children.

The Salvation Army saved Alice and her children with enough money to buy food and pay her utility bills.

"We went through tough times, and they were there," she said.

Now she's giving back. Alice will spend most of her weekend ringing the Salvation Army bell.

"This is just a good opportunity for me to give back, because they have been so good to me," she said.

Alice wears a bright red Santa hat and makes sure to wish every shopper a Merry Christmas.

"I show them a little love and wish them Merry Christmas whether they give or not," she said. "Not everyone that wants to give can give. But they can always come and volunteer to ring the bell."

Capt. Johnny Harsh of the Salvation Army said the organization is facing a lack of volunteers this season.

"We are way short. We need about a 1,000 hours filled," Harsh said. "It's very critical."

Harsh said volunteers usually

State farm bureau implements livestock tracking system

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A livestock tracking system in Kansas could reduce the risks of Mad Cow Disease.

The Kansas Farm Bureau has implemented its Beef Verification System, which tracks the shipment of cattle as well as documenting the animals' history.

Mark Nelson, director of the KFB's Commodities Division said the verification system is a private data sharing network that enables animals to be tracked from the time the animal is tagged to the time it is finished.

There are two ways to enroll cattle into the system. Ranchers can purchase scanners and tags and enter the animals into the BVS themselves, or they can fill out a hand-written card with the same information.

The system costs between $3.60 and $4.50 per animal depending on which method the rancher uses. Nelson said the higher charge is due to the time it takes to enter in the data.

That $3.60 is $1.35 for enrollment into the system and $2.25 per tag – a cost that will go down once the system is more common.

"It's not as simple as, put the tag on the calf's ear and everything is solved," Nelson said. "The cattle has to be put in the right channels."

There are four verification locations in the state, but a second wave of training for additional locations will take place next week.

Kevin Stous, owner and manager of Premiere Farm and Home in Topeka, said he has seen a lot of interest from ranchers who patronize his store. Premiere Farm and Home sells tags and scanners and then records

Housing proposes rate hike

Regents set to vote on increase

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Housing and dining rates may increase by 5 percent starting in May.

The proposed increase of $286 will change the cost for a double occupancy room and board from $5,216 to $5,502.

The Kansas Board of Regents will vote in December whether to approve the increase proposed by K-State Housing and Dining.

Hayley Urkevich, student body president, said the Regents usually approve K-State's housing and dining proposals as they are recommended.

"I would be relatively surprised if the board changed anything," she said.

Other Regent schools seek approval for rate increases as well.

The University of Kansas is asking for a 5.5 percent increase, Pittsburg State University for 5 percent, Fort Hays State University for 5 percent, Emporia State University for 7 percent and Wichita State University for 3 percent.

Bob Burgess, associate director for administrative services for Housing and dining, said the housing and dining rates increase annually.

Last year the Regents approved an 8 percent increase for K-State.

Rate increases are directly attributed to an increase in expenditures, Burgess said.

"Food costs have gone up, and energy-related costs have gone up," he said.

Senate balks on election rule changes

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Elections regulations changes some eight months in the making will have to wait until next semester to be put in the books for Student Governing Association.

At Thursday's meeting, the Student Senate voted to send the 16-page legislation back to the Senate Operations Committee, where it has spent the last eight months being deliberated, to clear up some issues involving limitations on where campaigning can take place.

Senators also unanimously passed a resolution appointing Arts and Sciences Senator David McCandless to the position of elections commissioner for next semester's SGA elections.

McCandless was the only applicant for the position, Senate Chair Eleri Griffin said.

Your guide to this weekend's entertainment

1 | WILDCAT CLASSIC

Today marks the start of the 10th annual Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic at Bramlage Coliseum. The event is a four-team women's basketball tournament between K-State (3-1), New Hampshire (1-2), Liberty (1-2) and Tennessee State (3-1).

The action tips off at 3 p.m. today as Liberty and Tennessee State hit the court. The Wildcats then take on New Hampshire at 5 p.m. today. The winners will play at 3 p.m. Saturday, following a consolation game at 1 p.m.

2 | BOOKS & MUSIC

Ready for a musical break before Dead Week? Head over to The Dusty Bookshelf today for a concert. Two acoustic bands — Daytrader and Pseudosmile — will perform an all-ages show during the day.

3 | WINTERDANCE

It happens once a year, and if you missed the opening night performance of Winterdance, you've got three more chances to see this KSU Dance production.

Many dancers will perform with guest artist Paloma Braggiato.

The events begins at 8 tonight and Saturday in Nichols Theatre, and a matinee production will start at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Tickets cost $7 for students and senior citizens, and $11 for the general public. Tickets may be purchased at the McCain box office, 532-6425.

4 | MISSION IMPROVABLE

Courtesy art

This week's After Hours, sponsored by Union Program Council, features a touring show of improvisational actors called Mission IMPROVable in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

Much in the style of "Whose Line is it Anyway?," the troupe of five improvisers will be making things up on the spot for the K-State audience starting at 9:30 tonight, followed by free food at 10 p.m. and a free screening of "Bad Santa" at midnight in Forum Hall.

RATES | Urkevich says changes worth the costs

President Ryan Spencer said the proposed rates also go to renovations and staff salaries.

"It covers the Ford Hall renovations that just happened and any other suites we will be working on," he said.

Unlike some universities, K-State students have a say in what the rate increases are, Burgess said.

"We choose to partner with the students in ARH to mutually determine what the rates will be in the upcoming year," he said.

Spencer said they try to keep rate increases in line with tuition increases.

Urkevich said the increase in rates is worth it.

"I think we have seen quite a bit of improvements with the residence halls, so I don't really foresee a negative reaction to the 5 percent increase in order to keep the same quality that we have now," Urkevich said.

Residence hall rate increases

	Present	Recommended
Double room	$2,568	$2,696
Double room as a single	$3,048	$3,176
Small single room	$2,718	$2,846
Suite single room	$3,290	#3,454
Suite double room	$3,170	$3,328
Suite triple room	$2,950	$3,200
Suite quad room	$2,710	$3,076

*Room rates provided are with a 20 meals per week plan.

Rate increases reflect the proposal made to the Kansas Board of Regents in November.

the funding of SafeRide that used to come from the City/University fund, but now must come from OSAS' budget, as well as increases in the compensation and scholarship of Student Senate officers which will take effect for next year's officers.

CITY/UNIVERSITY FUND

A bill authorizing the allocation of City/University Funds – money collected through tax dollars collected on campus that is used for projects that would benefit both the city and the university – also was passed unanimously.

Included in the bill was continued funding for the widening of Denison Avenue, as well as the expansion of the University Gardens Facility, along with the installation of two lighted crosswalk markers at high-traffic locations on North Manhattan Avenue to be determined after a study conducted by the city.

Other business

- A resolution authored by the entire body was passed unanimously commending OSAS Office Assistant LaToya Bilbo for her four years of service to the office.
- A bill allocating funds to the K-State Collegiate 4-H club for the making of a presentation kit to assist the club in teaching parliamentary procedure to other organizations passed.
- A bill allocating funds to Theta Alpha Phi, an honorary society for the arts, for members to travel to a competition passed.

CITY PARK LIGHTING ENHANCEMENTS

A resolution encouraging the Manhattan city government to consider increasing the lighting in City Park passed unanimously.

ADVISING IN THE COLLEGE OF BUSINESS

Associate Dean of the College of Business Administration Ike Ehie addressed the body during the first open period regarding ongoing concerns with the quality and availability of academic advising in the college.

Ehie, who expressed concern that coverage on the issue in the Collegian had been one-sided, said the problem may have been a result of personnel shortages caused by the unexpected departure of two advisers within a short period of time.

He said the college recently completed a survey of its students which indicated, while the quality of the advising still has room for improvement, students are more satisfied now than they were when an earlier survey was conducted.

the ranchers' data.

Ranchers receive reports four times a year.

Joseph Jury, general manager of Sagebrush Feeders – a verification location in Ingalls, Kan., – said ranchers receive premiums worth several hundred dollars once their cattle is source verified. There are immediate benefits, too.

Sagebrush Feeders received certification to be a verification location at the end of the month

"Anything over 30 months is being checked now for BSE," Jury said. "Even if you don't receive the premium, but one or two animals are suspect, you can go back to the records and say, 'no it's 26 months not 30."

The animal presumed positive for BSE two weeks ago, was eventually proved to be safe. Jury said source verification will prevent such scares from having major effects on the market.

"We may not be able to tell how or why the animal was infected but we'll definitely know where," he said.

TO THE POINT

Work to support charities this holiday season

It doesn't take much time, but it benefits others in many ways.

The Salvation Army bell ringing project involving people standing in store entryways is suffering and is in need of help ringers and donations alike.

This is the perfect opportunity for students to reach out and donate their time if they are unable to donate money, and vice-versa.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

Designing children

Illustrations by Jeff Yeung | COLLEGIAN

Opportunity to identify potential problems justifies

ABBY HILES

I'm probably going to be called Hitler after this column.

After all, Adolph Hitler is the forefather of designer children and breeding the perfect race. And when I say "designer," I don't mean babies being born with Prada diapers or dancing out of the womb wearing Gap khakis.

No, I'm talking about the idea of an Aryan race.

What could we, as a people, accomplish if we could breed a race without flaws? What would happen if you could change things about your baby before they were born, or, upon testing, decide it wasn't fair to let this child live in the first place due to disease or deformities?

You see, this fight isn't just about making a designer baby, anymore. This fight is about prenatal testing and future parents making some tough decisions. It's now about a woman's right to choose.

Almost every hospital offers prenatal testing on fetuses to detect genetic diseases. These tests are administered so future parents have an idea of what to expect. It is almost like a physical for your unborn child. These tests are necessary to detect things like Down Syndrome and debilitating diseases.

Administering the tests is an essential part of responsible parenting. By having prenatal genetic tests done, the parents know what they are up against. And if it comes down to a choice of keeping or aborting the unborn child, then so be it. It is a choice.

Just because some women might choose that path, that doesn't mean that the tests should be forgone altogether. The tests are a necessity – not to breed the future Aryan race, but so parents can be aptly prepared for what is to come.

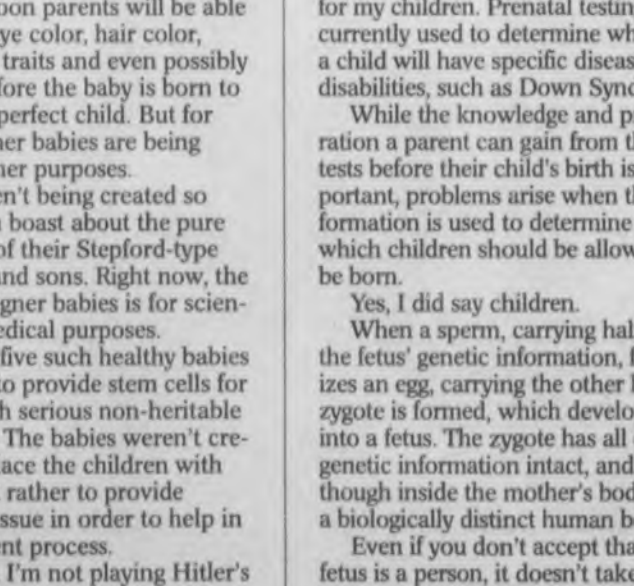
My opposition on this subject claims aborting children with possible disabilities makes the statement that disabled people are not worth living. And frankly, she is missing the point.

It isn't about showing prejudice and discrimination toward those with disabilities. As a pregnant woman you face many decisions and questions about the life you might bring into this world.

A child that has the possibility of being severely disabled is a scary thing for any future parent. In choosing to abort the child based on prenatal tests, the parent isn't making a judgment about the child in question, but rather a judgment on themselves. They personally cannot take care of this child and feel they would not do it justice by bringing it into the world.

I can see how the opposition views prenatal genetic testing as a means of selective breeding. After all, pretty soon parents will be able to choose eye color, hair color, personality traits and even possibly IQ level before the baby is born to ensure the perfect child. But for now, designer babies are being used for other purposes.

They aren't being created so parents can boast about the pure perfection of their Stepford-type daughters and sons. Right now, the idea of designer babies is for scientific and medical purposes.



In May, five such healthy babies were born to provide stem cells for siblings with serious non-heritable conditions. The babies weren't created to replace the children with defects, but rather to provide matching tissue in order to help in the treatment process.

You see, I'm not playing Hitler's advocate here.

Let's face it: this fight isn't about testing or designer babies. It's about abortion, Roe vs. Wade, and a woman's right to choose. And it's a little funny to see another woman advocating for laws that restrict her own civil liberties. You'd think that we'd all be on the same side.

I know I wouldn't want anyone else to tell me what to do with my own body, especially not 65-year-old men, living 1200 miles away, and none of whom have a uterus.

Child-choosing based on genetics a ridiculous idea

LETA REPPERT

I look more like my grandparents than like my parents; I've got my grandmother's blue eyes and my grandfather's curly hair.

One thing we don't know yet is if I've inherited the proclivity for cancer that killed both of my grandmothers.

I might be able to determine that for my children. Prenatal testing is currently used to determine whether a child will have specific diseases or disabilities, such as Down Syndrome.

While the knowledge and preparation a parent can gain from these tests before their child's birth is important, problems arise when this information is used to determine which children should be allowed to be born.

Yes, I did say children.

When a sperm, carrying half of the fetus' genetic information, fertilizes an egg, carrying the other half, a zygote is formed, which develops into a fetus. The zygote has all of its genetic information intact, and, although inside the mother's body, it is a biologically distinct human being.

Even if you don't accept that a fetus is a person, it doesn't take much to extend this kind of reasoning to infants. According to an Associated Press report, a hospital in the Netherlands has just released guidelines for euthanizing infants with terminal illnesses – and they already have begun to act upon them.

Choosing which children should be allowed to be born based on whether they have diseases or disabilities has been argued to be the equivalent of discriminating against the disabled, as Caroline Daniel of the New Statesman reports.

By determining those with disabilities are not good enough to be born, we are in effect making a comment about the worth of those living with that disability – or at the very least, we are saying their lives are not worth living.

The difference between making choices like this based on disabilities and making them based on other genetic factors isn't as big as it seems.

A study by the New England Regional Genetics group "showed 6 percent of prospective parents would consider an abortion if the fetus had a proclivity for Alzheimer's disease while 11 percent would do so if a test showed the child would have a proclivity for obesity," according to the Kansas City Star.

If it's now OK to abort a fetus based on its sex or on whether it will probably be overweight later in life, how much longer will it be until it's okay to use other physical, mental or personality characteristics to do the same?

John Gray points out in the New Statesman that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to regulate technology internationally. Think about nuclear weapons and North Korea or Iran, if you don't believe him. Even if we have excellent laws in place in this country regulating the use of this type of testing, other countries will not necessarily follow our rules for any technology we develop.

Think about what Adolf Hitler could have done with the type of technology we have now.

In addition to the concerns already listed, another big problem with being able to decide how our children will look, act and think is the emotional and psychological effects of these choices on our children.

No matter what the tests say, you cannot completely determine children's looks, intelligence and behavior before they are born. It's possible to be tall, blonde, thin and ugly.

By trying to pick and choose what our children are like, we will be creating unrealistic expectations that may be impossible for them to live up to, not to mention the stress on the children whose parents didn't decide to let only the smart, pretty ones be born.

When it comes right down to it, Burger-King-parenting isn't all it's cracked up to be. We just can't have it our way.

Registering for gifts can be easy

I was like a kid in a candy store.

My eyes shone bright, my heart skipped a beat, and I was all smiles. It was almost like the warm fuzzy feeling I have on Christmas morning when I know Santa has been good to me.

AMY PRESTON

We finally had arrived at my favorite pre-wedding destination: Target.

Finally, after weeks of annoying my fiancé, we made the trek to the store over Thanksgiving break to register for gifts. To Jack, the trip was too early for our June 4, 2005, wedding. But according to me and my 200-page wedding planner and calendar, we were two months behind in registering for the goods.

The experience, though, was not exactly what I had hoped for.

In fact, I think the best part of our registry trip occurred in the first 10 minutes, when Jack received the scanner gun, and the last 10 minutes, when he decided to scan a box of Slim Jims, hoping they would show up as a wrapped gift six months from now.

The two hours in between were filled with decisions, decisions and more decisions: decisions on shower curtains, decisions on bath towels. I even had to make a decision on what type of shower liner we were going to have and if the plunger would match the rest of the bathroom accessories.

Instead of enjoying our two hours at Target, I became stressed with all the decisions, and Jack became upset whenever I asked for his opinions. When we finally left the store, we were tired, exhausted and overwhelmed at the amount of decision-making we had to do.

Now, though, I'm faced with an even larger dilemma.

I'm addicted to this so-called registry phenomenon.

I now spend what little free time I have logging on to Target's Web site, adding items to the registry and searching through new featured accessories. During Christmas, I'm going to drag Jack into Dillard's to register for even more things. And late one night this week, instead of doing homework, I spent an hour researching the wedding registry Bed, Bath and Beyond offers when the closest one to my hometown is 45 minutes away.

I've gone mad. But fortunately, with proper planning and advice, newly-engaged couples can have a different gift registry experience. Here are some things The Knot Web site suggests when registering for gifts.

Do actually register. It ensures you won't get things you don't necessarily want or need and makes returning items easier.

Get registered soon after you become engaged.

Include your partner in the process. Don't overlook the details. Before committing to a registry, read the fine print and make sure the store will provide you with what you want.

But above all, enjoy yourself and take your time. Choose a time that will work for both you and your spouse and select items you will like to see when you unwrap them months from now.

Brides search for perfect dress

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was the first one she tried on, but she knew.

This was going to be her wedding dress.

Joni Stewart, senior in agriculture economics, said she knew the minute she saw herself in the mirror it was the wedding dress she had always wanted.

"I wanted something simple, yet elegant," Stewart, who is getting married Saturday, said.

"I tried on five dresses, and I went back to my first one. I knew it was the one, but decided to try on others just in case."

Stewart's dress is an A-line, floor-length gown with beading along the halter-top style. Her dress, she said, fits the elegant, simple style she envisioned for her winter wedding.

For Stewart, shopping for a wedding gown was simple, she said. But all brides may not have as easy of a time finding the dress of their dreams.

Laura Rothlisberger, owner of Celebrations of the Heart, said she suggests the bride to start small – especially if it's the first shopping trip.

"We typically don't take 10 to 15 gowns to the dressing room," she said.

"We start with about five, and we listen to them talk about their opinions on the dress. This sparks our thoughts on what dresses to get for them to try on."

In addition, Rothlisberger said she suggests not to take a large number of people into the dressing room area. Instead, she said brides could take along their mother and sister for the initial shopping trip, narrow the dress selection down, and then invite friends and other family members at a later time.

"Do your homework ahead of time so it alleviates the stress of trying dresses on," she said.

"We discourage having a lot of people back there in the dressing room. There can be a lot of opinions, and that is sometimes frustrating for the bride."

Stewart said she went with her mother when she purchased her wedding gown. While her mother was there for advice, Stewart said, she made the final decision.

"I valued her decisions very well, but I still wanted my own input on it," Stewart said.

Bridesmaid dresses also can be tricky to shop for, but Rothlisberger said one of the most important things to remember is to keep the attendants' body types in mind.

"A lot of styles the women are not comfortable in," she said. "What looks nice on a petite may not look good on a plus size, and vice versa."

One trend, she said, is many brides will try to mirror the bridesmaid dresses off of their own dress, although it's not necessary.

Stewart said she wanted to keep the simple, elegant style with her bridesmaid dresses, in addition to the halter-style top.

"I wanted their dresses to be the same as mine, but ones that could be worn again," Stewart said.

Ultimately Rothlisberger said brides can plan ahead while shopping for their dress, but that plans do change.

"We have many brides that come in with an idea and walk out with a dress that is totally different," she said.

Did you know?

Tips for shopping for a wedding dress

1. What it costs. Keep in mind that wedding dresses have a wide range in costs — anywhere from $100-$5,000. The key factors that affect price are time, workmanship and materials. When calculating a dress budget, also keep in mind costs for a veil, shoes, lingerie, jewelry, alterations and any other accessories.

2. Shop during off-hours. Take some time off during the week to begin shopping instead of waiting for the weekends. During the week you'll get more time and attention than on a busy from salespeople Saturday.

3. Be open. Don't eliminate anything at first glance. Try on all different kinds of dresses to decide which shape works best for you, and then narrow it down. Many times a bride chooses a dress style that she didn't have in mind before she went into the store.

4. Take your time. Give yourself time to review all the options and don't feel pressured to buy the first gown you like.

5. Sleep on it. If you think you've found your gown, take a day to be absolutely sure.

Athletics won't hurt from lack of bowl money

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"We have held some money back in case the licensing went belly up. If we have two or three seasons like this, then you could face one of those years where you have to use those funds."

John Fairman
ASSISTANT VICE PRESIDENT FOR INSTITUTIONAL ADVANCEMENT AND DIRECTOR OF LICENSING

For 11 seasons the K-State football team's success on the field earned it a spot in a postseason bowl game, and the Big 8/Big 12 Conference allocated from $750,000 to $1.6 million to the Wildcats for their efforts.

Unlike seasons past, the 2004 Wildcats were not able to reach the six-win plateau to earn bowl eligibility, but the K-State football team and athletic department will not take a financial hit, according to Department of Athletics officials.

"There are not any implications to the team not making it to a bowl game," Associate Athletic Director Bob Cavello said. "We always take a conservative approach, and we don't budget around bowl games."

Cavello said any money the university receives from the conference for playing in a postseason bowl game is around for only a short time.

"It goes fast," Cavello said. "The money we receive from the conference pays for the team's travel, meals and lodging. We equate it to moving a small army, because for the six or seven days we are there, it is an existing home away from home."

Along with football personnel accommodations, the allotment also allows for the "Pride of Wildcat Land" to bring its school spirit to support the Wildcats. K-State marching band members' travel and lodging accommodations also are taken care of by the money from the conference.

Although there are no financial implications for the athletic department, one area that is affected is licensing of K-State merchandise.

Assistant Vice President for Institutional Advancement and Director of Licensing John Fairman said the money generated from bowl games is not taken into account, but merchandise will see a decrease with no bowl participation for the Wildcats.

"Going to a bowl game does generate sales, but unless you are in a Bowl Championship Series bowl, it is only a 10-percent impact," Fairman said.

"We usually look at around $10,000 to $25,000 in merchandise from a bowl game."

During K-State's streak of 11 bowl games the Center for Institutional Advancement, which operates K-State licensing, has been able to create a nest egg in case of a season like 2004.

"We have held some money back in case the licensing went belly up," Fairman said. "If we have two or three seasons like this, then you could face one of those years where you have to use those funds."

The funds from the licensing of K-State merchandise provides scholarships for the marching band, cheerleaders, the general student population and also provides scholarships for student athletes.

Despite the football team's worst record since Coach Bill Snyder's first year in 1989, some fans believe the 2004 season was just a bump in the road and missing out on funds from a bowl game will not be a problem.

"I think it is just a fluke," Garrett Boller, freshman in secondary education, said.

"I think next year Bill is going to fix it. He always has. I mean, the money is a good thing, but I think financially we are doing good."

Learning from loss

Cats hope to improve for weekend tourney

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Losses are rarely seen as a good thing.

But for the No. 19 K-State women's basketball team, its 63-51 loss against No. 10 Duke last week at the Junkanoo Jam Tournament was a learning experience.

With K-State (3-1) preparing to face New Hampshire today at 5 p.m. in the first round of the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic at Bramlage Coliseum, Coach Deb Patterson said the Wildcats have focused on playing more within themselves.

"We watched the film (of the Duke game), and I think we learned a great deal about how important offensive execution as a group of five is," Patterson said.

Senior Brie Madden said the team is ready to move on, but there are positives to take away from the loss to Duke.

"You've got to look at the bright side," Madden said. "We didn't play well at all, but yet it was close, and we could have been in the game. Now, we want to get better every day we step on the court and in everything we do."

UNH comes in with 85 3-pointer attempts in three games. Even though the team has only made 19 of those shots, Patterson said the Wildcats must view every New Hampshire player as a shooting threat.

"New Hampshire will bring a real open-floor type of style," Patterson said. "You'll see a team that's very, very willing to shoot the three-ball from every position on the floor. It's a team that will fire it up quick if they're not guarded."

The Wildcats have found success in their home tournament lately, as they have won the Classic the last six years.

Freshman Carolyn McCullough said the Wildcats are happy to be playing on their court again with a chance to go against a variety of competition.

"It was a great atmosphere (in the Bahamas), but it's not home," McCullough said. "We love playing at home because of our great support, and it is going to be a lot of fun to see some teams that we don't normally get to see."

If K-State beats New Hampshire, it will meet the winner of the Tennessee State versus Liberty game.

Liberty comes into the Classic with a 1-2 record, while Tennessee State is 3-1.

Patterson said Liberty's Katie Feenstra, 6-foot-8 center, is a dominating player down low.

"With Liberty, you've got a player on the floor in Feenstra that is a Wade Trophy nominee, that is an All-American candidate," Patterson said.

In Tennessee State, Patterson said she sees a smaller team, but one that plays with determination.

"It's a basketball team that, while undersized, will maximize every single possession. They play aggressive on both ends of the floor," Patterson said.

Volleyball team defeats Matadors, advances to NCAA 2nd round

Wildcats sweep CSUN in 3 games in Los Angeles

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's volleyball team advanced to the second round of the NCAA Tournament Thursday night, sweeping Cal-State Northridge 30-20, 30-23 and 30-25 in Los Angeles.

At 9 tonight (7 p.m. PT), K-State will face the winner of the night's late match between Southern California and College of Charleston.

The win gives the No. 23 Wildcats a 20-10 record and sends them to the second round of tournament play for the seventh-straight year. With the loss, the Matadors finish the season at 17-11.

Both teams hit poorly to start the match, with K-State hitting .073 in the first game, while Cal-State Northridge opened hitting -.111. The Wildcats warmed up to hit .195 for the match, while holding the Matadors to just .045.

"I thought we were well prepared for the match," Coach Suzie Fritz said. "We knew that Jen Ryan (CSUN outside hitter) was about 60 percent of their offense, so we knew we had to stop her. The girls did a nice job of executing the game plan for the first two games, but we got away from it a little bit in game three. But, towards the end of the match, they got back on track and closed out the game on a positive note."

The Wildcats found themselves down 15-14 in game one before reeling off six unanswered points and cruising to the win.

In game two, K-State extended an early 13-7 lead to 28-18 before winning by seven with a kill on a dig by Lastra. Cal-State Northridge pulled as close as 22-20 in game three before the Wildcats pulled away to take the match.

Senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas led K-State with 17 kills on solid .361 hitting. Senior setter Gabby Guerre came close to a triple-double with 34 assists, eight kills and seven digs. Sophomore Sandy Werner added 11 kills, and freshman libero Angie Lastra had 22 digs.

Guerre's performance moved her into second on K-State's all-time career assist list.

In tonight's match, the Wildcats will likely face Southern California. The Trojans are the two-time defending NCAA champions and are No. 8 in the country with a 19-5 record.

MLB | Giambi admitted steroid use, report says

New York Yankees slugger Jason Giambi injected himself with human growth hormone in 2003 and used steroids for at least three seasons, according to his grand jury testimony that was reviewed by the San Francisco Chronicle.

Giambi

The testimony, given in December 2003, to the federal grand jury investigating BALCO contradicts Giambi's public proclamations that he never used performance-enhancing drugs.

Penalties for steroid use in baseball started in 2003, but testing with samples identified by player didn't start until 2004, making it unclear if Giambi could be retroactively disciplined for any admission. Human growth hormone, or hGH, is not specifically banned by the major leagues.

Giambi described to grand jurors how he injected hGH in his stomach, testosterone into his buttocks, rubbed an undetectable steroid knows as "the cream" on his body and placed drops of another, called "the clear," under his tongue, the Chronicle reported Thursday.

Giambi testified that he obtained several different steroids from Barry Bonds' personal trainer, Greg Anderson, one of four men indicted by the grand jury probing the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative. He said he got the hGH from a gym in Las Vegas.

Reports that New York Yankees' slugger Jason Giambi testified that he used steroids has the sports world in an uproar. Read how Josh Witt feels this latest revelation points to the likelihood of Barry Bonds also using steroids at www.kstatecollegian.com.

MLB | Selig schedules Friday vote on Expos

Baseball commissioner Bud Selig scheduled a conference call for Friday for owners to vote on the proposed move of the Montreal Expos to Washington.

A notice to the major league teams went out late Wednesday. The vote by owners is expected to be conditioned on the District of Columbia completing legislation to fund a new ballpark for the team.

The D.C. Council voted earlier this week to approve financing but must vote a second time for the measure to become law. In addition, the Council added a $630 million cap to the project that was not contained in the agreement signed in September by the Expos and Washington Mayor Anthony Williams.

Bob DuPuy, baseball's chief operating officer, met with Baltimore Orioles owner Peter Angelos earlier this week in an attempt to reach an agreement that would protect the Orioles franchise. Angelos says the team in Washington will cut his club's revenue.

NHL | League, union headed back to negotiations

The NHL accepted an invitation from the players' association on Thursday to return to the negotiating table in an effort to end the lockout that began nearly three months ago.

In a letter sent to NHL commissioner Gary Bettman on Thursday, players' association executive director Bob Goodenow proposed that the sides meet next week in Toronto and said the union is working on a new proposal.

No official talks have occurred since Sept. 9, when the union made its last offer. The lockout reached its 78th day Thursday.

The last offer by the NHLPA was a luxury tax-based deal that was rejected by the league, and the lockout began one week later.

As of Thursday, 334 regular-season games, plus the 2005 All-Star game, have been wiped out.

The offer to resume talks came just hours before the league's general managers prepared to get an update from Bettman during a dinner meeting in New York.

The players' association said its new proposal should provide the basis for a new collective bargaining agreement.

BirdHouse series welcomes Celtic stylings of bohola tonight at Arts Center

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An array of fast-paced Celtic music can be heard tonight at the Manhattan Arts Center.

The MAC's BirdHouse Acoustic Music Series will end this year when bohola takes the stage at 8 tonight.

The quartet, with roots from Ireland, started playing in bars in Chicago and later performed globally over the past two decades.

The Celtic style of music features an up-tempo style of music with many traditional folk stringed and woodwind instruments, accompanied by the interweaving of entrancing, soaring vocals.

Spelled with a lowercase "B," bohola is comprised of Jimmy Keane, renowned all-Ireland accordion champion; Pat Broaders on the bouzouki, which is a bass-sounding Greek stringed instrument equipped with a long neck; award-winning fiddle player Sean Cleland and well-respected vocalist and guitarist Kat Eggleston.

The group will present Nollaig, a celebration of the winter season that includes both Christian and Pagan traditions involving the winter solstice in a variation of Celtic songs, ranging up to 20 minutes each.

Although touring throughout the Midwest and the rest of the nation for many years, bohola will be making its first trip to Manhattan, and David Kamerer, MAC volunteer, said he has been looking forward to the event.

"It will be the most fun BirdHouse concert this year," Kamerer said. "bohola is in the top tier of Celtic bands today."

Kamerer said bohola plays mostly traditional-style Celtic music that is centuries old.

"I just love the ability of them to play the driving tunes of jigs and reels of the Celtic style music," Kamerer said.

Kamerer said the BirdHouse, which holds approximately 150 people, is an acoustical setting much like the MTV "Unplugged" sessions.

"It is a real intimate atmosphere," Kamerer said. "The concert will be irresistible and seductive," he said.

Penny Senften, executive director of the MAC, said she believes the BirdHouse concert will produce a good showing, even though people may not have heard of bohola.

"The artists like playing here, and people know that they will be good because they are part of the BirdHouse Series," Senften said. "It's really popular and usually have a good crowd."

Although being the last of the year, Senften and the rest of the MAC have most of the spring season lineup already booked.

"The bohola concert is going to fairly big and important for the series because of the timing of when they will perform," Senften said.

Taking tips from Bridget Jones' diary can romantically help singles

"The Edge of Reason" tells singles to not overcompensate for personal imperfections

Over Thanksgiving break, I, like many other single females, braved the holiday crowds to go see "Bridget Jones: The Edge of Reason," the second Bridget Jones movie.

LACEY STORER

Bridget has become a sort of role model for my friends and me. She has fun friends that can pull her out of any situation, a cool job (even if she isn't the best at it), and she has hot guys like Hugh Grant chasing after her.

She's the British version of Carrie Bradshaw, showing us that being single and 30-something doesn't mean you can't be single, 30-something and fabulous.

Even if she is older and slightly overweight, Bridget never gives up hope that love is out there for her, just waiting to find her. It's a pretty inspiring message for those of us waiting for love who are only 20-something and single.

The one thing I don't like about Bridget is she often feels the need to compensate for what she sees as her imperfections or weaknesses. She tends to see herself as inferior in many situations and works to hide her ignorance of things.

When you are navigating the treacherous lands of the dating world, it can be tempting to stretch the truth about yourself. You say or do things that will make you appear smarter or funnier or just better in general. You don't want the person you're dating to think there may be some areas in which you're lacking.

The thing is, this seems to contradict the purpose of dating itself. Why do we go through all of the bad dates and bad ex's if not to find the one person with whom we can completely be ourselves? Isn't the goal to find someone who will love you just the way you are, imperfections and all?

If you spend all of your time trying to hide what you don't have, it seems to me that you tend to never show what you do have. If you try to pretend that you know all about your guy's favorite metal rock band, when will he learn about your love for classic oldies?

If you continually try to hide the fact that you never keep up with current events to your journalist girlfriend, won't you spend every conversation involving current events nervous that she will find out?

When you're dating someone, you shouldn't have to spend your time with them feeling like you need to impress them. Just being your naturally fabulous self should be enough. If you are with the right person, your best self will just naturally shine, no exaggerations needed.

One drawback of constantly working to impress someone is that when you pretend to be something that you aren't, you usually end up making more of a fool of yourself than you would have if you had just admitted ignorance.

Bridget gives a great example of this in the second movie. She goes on a skiing holiday with her boyfriend, Mark, after telling "a little white lie about being able to ski."

Not wanting to look dumb because she doesn't know how to ski, she instead ends up looking even dumber when she skis down the mountain sideways and interrupts a skiing competition.

In the end, Bridget finds a man who loves her just the way she is, and that's how it should be. You find someone who loves you for you without needing to exaggerate or stretch the truth about yourself.

As dumb or awkward as you might feel sometimes, you are lovable just as you are.

Pavarotti signs deal for farewell tour

Luciano Pavarotti, long a giant in the opera world, has signed a contract for a 40-date worldwide farewell tour.

Pavarotti, whose tenor voice has filled opera halls for more than four decades, will perform in countries throughout North and South America, Europe, Asia, New Zealand and Australia.

"This tour will be very emotional," the singer said in a statement.

The concerts will be produced by British producer Harvey Goldsmith. Dates are yet to be announced.

Malkovich to play role of artist Klimt

John Malkovich will play the lead in a movie about the life of Austrian artist Gustav Klimt.

The movie, titled "Klimt," will depict the life of the famous art nouveau painter whose masterpieces include "The Kiss." Shooting will begin Jan. 4 in Vienna, the film's leading producer, epo-film, said Thursday.

Malkovich eagerly agreed to play Klimt, said Susanne Biro, an epo-film official.

"He was our first choice," she said. "He physically resembles Klimt, and he is a good friend of (screenwriter-director Raoul) Ruiz."

Bell ringers give time to raise money for charity collect $30 each hour. Last year was a record year with $41,000 collected. However, Target is no longer allowing bell ringers at their stores, which could mean a $10,000 loss.

"That's been big," Harsh said. "It's a big hole to fill. Target did give a cash donation this year. We were hoping that next year they will change their policy."

Money collected goes to people in need in Riley County to help with rent payments, utility bills, car repairs, groceries, school supplies or prescriptions.

"We are the No. 1 agency in town for utilities and rent," he said. "It continues to be a huge problem here in Riley County."

If people don't want to ring the bell, Harsh said individuals or companies can adopt a kettle and pledge to match the donations made during a day or week.

"It makes your community a better place to live when people have some place to reach out. They aren't going to do something illegal," he said. "We are a giving community, and a person doesn't have to shoplift or something to get funds. There are funds in this town if they know where to go. It makes us a safe place to live."

SHARING SMILES

Barb Siebold figures her musical Santa hat adds at least $40 to the kettle each hour.

She and Nita Prickett met each other through bell ringing and have made a tradition out of it.

"We like to get wild and crazy," Barb said while ringing Thursday at Hobby Lobby .

Barb and Nita, who attend the same church, said their goal is to make shoppers smile whether they donate money or not.

"God tells us to love our brothers and neighbors, and what better time than Christmas?" said Nita, administrative specialist in the Department of Continuing Education.

Although they said Dillons is their favorite place to ring, Hobby Lobby meant Nita and Barb could do surveys of what people were buying. They sometimes sing Christmas carols as the shoppers walk by.

"We're in a community, and it's part of what we can do," Barb said.

GIVING BACK

It was Sean Gibson's first time ringing the bell Thursday but not his first encounter with the Salvation Army.

Sean worked all day and evening ringing the bell as a way to give back to the organization that helped him make rent payments last year.

Sean, a Manhattan native, now works at Kelly Services and takes care of his two children.

"My kids mean the world to me," he said.

Sean said he wishes he could dance and sing like bell-ringing friends of his, but instead relies on a smile and holiday greeting.

"It's a cold job, but it's worth it if you know in your heart," he said, "that someone out there who needs help, you are helping."

Wichita police await test results

By Roxana Hegeman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA, Kan. – Authorities are testing the DNA of a man arrested on minor trespassing and housing code violations to see if he has any connection with the BTK serial killings that terrorized the city in the 1970s, state police said Thursday.

Since the 1980s, police have tested hundreds of samples of blood and DNA in the case, police noted.

Wichita police spokeswoman Janet Johnson told reporters Thursday that no arrest has been made in the BTK case and that investigators have received thousands of tips.

If people named in the tips have outstanding warrants, they are picked up, she said.

That's what happened Wednesday night when the man was arrested, she said.

Alpha Phi Alpha chapter names Black and Gold pageant winners

By Alex Yocum
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Determined intelligent vibrant alluring sisters – divas. That described the contestants of the sixth annual Miss Black and Gold pageant.

Along with the theme of the pageant, the seats of K-State Student Union Forum Hall rang with shouts and cheering while judges had the decision of who embodied the qualities to be named Alpha Phi Alpha, Kappa Tau chapter's next Miss Black and Gold.

"The winner is the young lady who has the overall package," Brandon Clark,, senior in social sciences, said. "Some people shine in some areas, but the young lady who does consistently well will receive the crown."

The winner of Miss Black and Gold 2004 went to LaToya Loren, sophomore in social science. Along with being name Miss Black and Gold, Loren received the titles of Miss Swim Wear and Miss Sisterhood, which was the only award voted on by the contestants.

"I can't believe it," Loren said. "I just wanted to try something new, but I guess the hard work paid off."

Loren was given a $300 book scholarship and became an auxiliary member of the chapter's community service committee.

Miss Black, the second runner-up, and Miss Gold, the first runner-up, also will accompany Miss Black and Gold in her duties on the committee.

"I am excited to work with the community, the two other women and the men," Kendra Spencer, junior in social sciences said. "I would like to go out in the community and help the minority. I think we could have a positive influence and be role models for them."

Spencer was named Miss Gold and recited an original piece called "Keep It Real" to receive the title of Miss Talent.

Angela Nichols, senior in kinesiology, was named Miss Black along with three other titles, Miss GPA, Miss Souvenir Book and Miss Elegance.

The pageant, which got its name from the colors of fraternity, started its preparation in early September and Miss Gold 2004 Kendra Spencer, junior in social sciences, celebrates winning the title of Miss Gold after the Black and Gold Pageant Saturday evening in Forum Hall. As Miss Gold, Spencer received a $200 scholarship and will fill in for Miss Black and Gold if she is unable to fulfill her duties.

17 dead after ambush of bus full of Iraqis

By Nick Wadhams
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Gunmen ambushed a bus carrying unarmed Iraqis to work at a U.S. ammo dump near Tikrit on Sunday, killing 17 and raising the toll from three days of intensified and bloody insurgent attacks to at least 70 Iraqi dead and dozens wounded.

The attacks, focused in Baghdad and several cities to the north, appeared to be aimed at scaring off those who cooperate with the American military – whether police, national guardsmen, Kurdish militias, or ordinary people just looking for a paycheck.

The violence came just weeks after the United States launched major offensives aimed at suppressing guerrillas ahead of crucial elections set for Jan. 30. Later Sunday, several small Sunni Muslim groups joined more influential Sunni clerics in demanding that the vote be postponed by six months.

Sunday's bloodshed began when gunmen opened fire at the bus as it dropped off Iraqis employed by coalition forces at a weapons dump in Tikrit, 80 miles north of Baghdad, said Capt. Bill Coppernoll, spokesman for the Tikrit-based U.S. 1st Infantry Division. Coppernoll said 17 people died and 13 wounded in the attack.

Survivors said about seven guerrillas were involved, emptying their clips into the bus before fleeing. The bodies of the victims were brought to a morgue too small to hold them all; some were left in the street.

About an hour later, a suicide car bomber drove into an Iraqi National Guard checkpoint in Beiji, detonating his explosives-packed vehicle, Coppernoll said.

Library quiet hours in effect through Dec. 17

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Preparation for finals week is a stressful time.

Add the factor of not being able to find a quiet solace to study, and it gets worse.

To ease the problem, Hale Library will have quiet study hours today through Dec. 17.

The second floor and the Lehner 24-hour study area are the only exceptions to the rule.

Sara Kearns, business-economics librarian at Hale, said the quiet hours have been instituted in response to students complaining about the noise level.

"This seemed to be the easiest solution on the students' part. There is always more people in the library during finals week, so lots more noise," Kearns said.

Kearns said the future of quiet study areas during finals week depends on the response they get from students.

There will be feedback forms available in the library for students to voice their concerns with the hours of quiet study.

Did you know?
Hale Library

- Hale Library quiet areas last from today through Dec. 17.
- All areas of the library, except the Lehner 24 hour study area and the second floor, are reserved for quiet study.

"We want to know if we have too much group study space or too little. We need to know the study atmosphere they are looking for so that we can specify areas in the future," Kearns said.

"We are waiting for the students to tell us before we plan to do this again in the future."

The fourth floor of Hale is under construction, something Kearns said can affect the noise level of that floor.

"They are getting compact shelving on the fourth floor, so during regular business hours it'll be loud," Kearns said.

Hale Library opened at 1 p.m. Sunday and will not close until 5 p.m. Dec. 17, she said.

"Everyone will be keeping their regular hours, we are just getting more security staffing for the trial period," Kearns said.

Student leadership suggests new teacher evaluations possible soon

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Possibilities of evaluating professors during the middle of a course are being considered to help both students and faculty.

Hayley Urkevich, student body president, said faculty evaluations carried out at the end of a course collect feedback from students enrolled in the course about the instructor and the course content.

The feedback is used assess the performance of the instructor and to determine future changes to the course, she said.

The evaluations did not provide an objective measure of the course and would be far more beneficial if some of the results were made available to the students, Urkevich said.

Conducting course evaluations online using the PickAProf program during the middle of a course could make it easier to implement changes, she said.

The PickAProf program allows instructors to conduct student surveys and receive feedback from students while the course is still in session, Urkevich said.

She also said the faculty was a little cautious about supporting the program, owing to reliability issues and also problems with monitoring such evaluations.

Various options were being considered to make these evaluations far more beneficial to students, Urkevich said.

Anindya Banerjee, associate professor of computing and information sciences, said course evaluations during the middle of a course would help instructors

The current evaluations were not sufficient to provide accurate and cohesive information to the instructors, he said.

"There should be more give and take between the instructor and the students, who need to be more forthright in their opinions. The evaluations depend mostly on the mood of the student, which is why I use my own set of evaluation questions," he said.

Susheel Pal, graduate student in computing and information sciences, said the evaluations were not adequate and did not cover all avenues of a course.

The questions need to be more comprehensive and should focus more on the student rather than just trying to evaluate instructor performance, he said.

"Another issue of concern is whether any changes are being implemented at all in the subsequent semesters of the course," he said.

Sebelius passes initiative for Kansas school funding audit

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas school districts will be held more accountable to taxpayers because of a new initiative passed by Gov. Kathleen Sebelius.

The initiative includes examining where Kansas school districts spend their tax dollars and then auditing four to six districts.

According to the Associated Press, the study could cost as much as $330,000 and is scheduled to be finished in the spring

Research will be done by Standard and Poor's School Evaluation Services through the Business Education Partnership and the Kauffman Foundation.

Nicole Corcoran, spokeswoman for the governor's office, said the research is being conducted, so the governor can have a better idea of how much money is being spent on administrative and instructional purposes.

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Opposition still out in force

Gali Tibbon | AFP/GETTY IMAGES

Supporters of Ukrainian opposition leader Viktor Yushchenko shout and wave during a rally Sunday in Kiev. Ukraine's pro-West opposition insisted it would not accept reforms ahead of a rerun election.

Staff and wire reports

Ukrainian opposition leader Viktor Yushchenko is refusing to back down from the presidential election, and he and his supporters are demanding a new runoff election.

On Wednesday, the parliament voted no confidence in its government, securing additional support for Yushchenko's allies.

CABINET SHAKEUP

President Bush's cabinet continued its transition from his first to second term as Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge announced he would step down.

Ridge was appointed as the first secretary of the department.

Bush filled two other vacant positions on his cabinet last week, announcing Carlos Gutierrez would step in as secretary of commerce and Nebraska Gov. Mike Johanns would be the new secretary of Agriculture.

KANSAS TO START DRUG PLAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius announced Tuesday she will join a small force of Democratic governors to import prescription drugs from Canada and Europe.

Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich is spearheading the effort, which Sebelius said could save Kansans 25 to 50 percent on qualifying drugs.

IRAQ ELECTIONS

U.S. and Iraqi officials are insistent the country's elections will continue as planned Jan. 30.

In preparation for the elections, the United States announced Wednesday it would increase its troop levels in the country. U.S. forces in the country will reach about 150,000, up from 138,000, but will be decreased in March.

BTK KILLER

Wichita police released a detailed profile of an at-large serial killer linked to eight murders.

The BTK killer sent a letter to the Wichita Eagle in March, and police have asked for help in identifying the man they believe is responsible for the murders, based on clues in previous letters.

Police on Wednesday arrested a man they believed fit parts of the description, but he was later cleared.

BUSH IN CANADA

President Bush expressed his gratitude for the Canadians who welcomed him on his visit – especially those who welcomed him by waving "with all five fingers."

Acknowledging his unpopular image in the country, Bush attempted to mend ties with the U.S.'s northern neighbor.

AMBASSADOR RESIGNATION

John Danforth, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, announced his resignation. Danforth told President Bush he would like to spend more time with his wife, who has had health problems.

held rehearsals up to the night before the event.

This year's pageant was different than the rest. Not only did it take place on Alpha Phi Alpha's Founders' Day, but the contest did not have its normal participant rate of 14.

When naming all the women before the winners were announced, Jordan Thomas, co-coordinator, took a moment to remember one participant, Barbara Meyer, who died in a car accident earlier this year.

The night not only remembered what was lost but also embraced the African American women of today by putting them in a category with Lena Horne, Patti LaBelle and Ella Fitzgerald.

Spencer, along with many of the girls, were pleased to be categorized with some of the greats and said the message that comes along with that is African American women are intelligent, talented and beautiful and should be noticed for that and their accomplishments.

"We are happy and proud of all the girls," Clark said. "They overcame their fears and really shined bright last night. They showcased that they are divas, and they were all winners. It is hard to get up there, and for that our community thanks them."

AUDIT | Local superintendent objects to state study

"The goal is to make sure they are doing everything possible to make the money reach the classroom," she said.

Corcoran said the study is not just focusing on the bottom dollar.

"It's also trying to highlight the best practices," she said.

More than 50 percent of the state's budget goes to K-12 education, Corcoran said. About two-thirds of a school district's budget is from the state, she said.

Sharol Little, superintendent for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, said the study is just a delay tactic.

"I think it's a good idea, but it's just another study that is going to cost money and delay the real need for schools to find answers to their state finance formula and the dilemma that we're in with a shortage of funds," Little said.

Little said the state should examine school districts by their students' performance, not their funding.

"I think they do need input from Kansas school experts, and I do believe that the definition of school efficiency should be measured by its impact on the students or student achievements," she said.

However, Little said, there are changes that could be made.

"I do believe we can be more efficient with what we have; we've just never had enough," she said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Instructors need feedback before semester's end

Students, faculty and administrators should readily endorse the proposal to assess instructors' classroom performance midway through the semester.

If used before the semester's end, the online PickAProf program could allow students to evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of their instructors' courses – while there is still an opportunity for the instructors to improve weaker course components and to capitalize upon higher points of success.

At this time, there is little to no formal opportunity for students to communicate to instructors which specific parts of the course need extra attention, or possibly even a complete overhaul.

By the time students complete an end-of-semester TEVAL, which has traditionally been the only assessment tool students have to critique instructors, it is too late for instructors to improve the course for that group of students.

It's only logical that ongoing performance evaluation should be a reciprocated action, with students' progress assessed through examinations or other critical feedback and instructors' efforts evaluated through a service such as PickAProf.

Consider this a mid-term for teachers.

JONAS HOGG

As the end of the semester rolls on in, there are many who will soon be leaving our midst. The question on many of their minds is, "what now?"

Doubtless many of our graduates will go on to do great things. This university has produced chemists, engineers, hotel managers, social scientists and even the current Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Myers.

These are the people that show the rest of us that hard work and perseverance does pay off. But it is not these people that I am concerned about. I am concerned about the other portion of our graduates.

These are the people who will re-emerge from anonymity during the last few weeks of class in a desperate attempt to get that vaunted "C." These are the people who vanished in early September only to reappear sporadically throughout the semester, if ever again.

These are the people who, through a combination of wasting their parent's money and everyone else's time, have managed to squeak out of here with a degree.

Those of us who have actually put effort into getting an education will be only too happy to see you go. Sadly, there's another fresh crop of idiots just waiting to take your place.

Fortunately, I think we'll be able to survive without you.

Granted, it will be hard. I'm sure that some of us will miss having to wait for you to finish your game of Yahoo!Pool on the library computers before we can actually do work.

As you are now a college graduate, maybe you are prepared to take on the strategy and intricacies of Solitaire.

I'll certainly miss you coming in however many minutes late to class, making as much noise as humanly possible. Fortunately, the job waiting for you mixing asphalt will allow for you to be as noisy as you could possibly want.

The classrooms will be lonely without your inane babble in the background. Ranging from intellectually scintillating topics such as "oh man, I got so drunk last night" to the brain teaser "oh wow, he's so hot." I can only hope your oratory skills serve you well as you flex your diploma by charging into that drive-through manager's position.

Are you one of these people? If so, then as the realization that you have frittered away several years of your life and thousands of dollars rolls over you, I want you to reflect on all these moments the rest of us truly treasure.

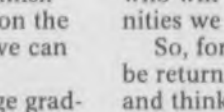
But, don't worry about the thousands of dollars that you owe for student loans. I'm sure they'll forgive them all when you tell them that you really didn't think that you would ever have to pay them back.

Ultimately, maybe it will dawn on you that you really didn't need to be here. That higher education was not, in fact, put into place to provide four additional years of high school.

There are many, like myself, who worked hard to get here, and now that we are here, continue to work hard. For us, having to wade through a sea of morons only cheapens the experience we've worked so hard to have.

As I said in my first column, there are many people, probably more deserving than you and I, who will never have the opportunities we have.

So, for those of you who will be returning next semester, stop and think about what you're doing.



If you're not here with an intent to learn then kindly extricate yourself and make way for someone who is.

Jonas Hogg is getting recalled to the Army in January and losing this opportunity. Please send comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Odd tradition makes holiday special

JEREMY PARKER

With the exception of Festivus (Dec. 23) and my annual foot-shaving day (every July 23, for the last seven years), Christmas is my favorite holiday.

Like everyone else, I pretend to like Christmas under the guise that it's a time for family, caring, and sharing. Also like everyone else, I don't really believe any of that crap – I just dig good loot.

But with the good comes the weird, and I'm sure each of you have woken up Christmas morning and received more than your fair share of "things that make you go, 'hmm.'"

Well move over, Grover, because I guarantee I've got you beat. In fact, I've never met anyone who even comes close to challenging the Parker family in a battle of "Get a Load of What Our Weird Relatives Gave Us This Year."

When you were a kid, did you ever go to your grandparents' house and wake up to a stocking stuffed with a plastic toothpaste crank?

Didn't think so. This positively pertote triumph of modern technology is clamped onto the end of the tube and rolled upward via a weird, medieval-style crank.

In addition to making me the envy of the neighborhood, "the crank" meticulously extracts every last iota of toothpaste from the tube because apparently, the world is suffering from a crippling shortage.

While my confusion with "the crank" was evident, it was merely a prelude to what I was to experience in future years.

Did someone say "tap light"? I sure didn't, but I got one anyway.

Then there's the "exotic bird wall clock" I received a few years ago? As the clock struck each hour, a different bird's call would play at a screechingly loud volume.

And nothing honors the baby Jesus like a Rotato!

With this time saving, potato-peeling device, you can skin the spud by turning a lever that rotates the tuber against a blade.

I assure you, it's just what I wanted for Christmas at age 17.

I was substantially befuddled by each of the aforementioned presents, but nothing can compare to the complete bewilderment I experienced last Christmas, when I sat down and unwrapped a cardboard box crammed full of drill bits and ratchet attachments.

The accompanying instructional note informed me the attachments were "for the next time your car breaks down." I appreciated the gesture, but found this a little odd, as anyone who knows me knows that I'm completely cartarded.

I wouldn't have the foggiest idea how to fix any car problem, even if the attachments had come with a ratchet or drill to use with them.

But misery loves company, and nothing gives me more joy than seeing my fellow family members' puzzled looks on Christmas morning, as well.

Like the time my sister unwrapped her brand new ceramic taco shell holder. Or the time my mother received a lovely new pair of fingerless leather gloves (you know, just in case she ever wanted that gig playing bass with Motley Crue).

Now, don't get me wrong: despite my sarcasm, I'm actually very thankful that my family is able to shower me with oodles and oodles of presents every year.

The majority of the gifts I receive are actually quite normal and useful, but who would want to read that column? No one, and I don't want to write it.

Instead, I'd rather go on about things like the "2000: The New Millennium" necktie I received, which features a majestic bald eagle perched atop a suspiciously tiny planet Earth.

Unfortunately, though, the time has come for me to be hittin' the old dusty trail, so happy holidays

If anyone needs me, I'll be at home counting down the days until I can shave my feet again.

Jeremy Parker maintains that last week's field trip to Junction City was simply for sociological research purposes. Please send comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Yeah, all the Democrats said they were gonna leave if Bush was elected. I'm still waiting on them to leave, it'd make things a lot better.

Shanna Hajek: it was a bunch of balding, 50-year-old men who told women they could have abortions in the first place.

I only took a glance, but the way the snow is melting off of Putnam looks like it spells out 'Hanukkah.'

I just wanted to say that Will Klusener should ditch his friends on Sunday and come eat dinner with me.

To the big bad K-State baseball players: Win a game and then strut around the Derb.

The only thing that is historic about Farrell Library is that's where I lost my virginity.

For your information, guys, Aqua Teen Hunger Force. Yeah, it's on Cartoon Network, not Comedy Central. Get your facts right.

If the butt cans are too close to the building, report it to grounds. A lot of smokers have a little way of moving them closer to where they come out of the building so they can stay toasty warm. Make them move it back. That's your responsibility too, to call grounds.

The facebook is going to be the reason I fail all my finals.

What's the deal with that? I think I just saw a parking services guy putting a ticket on the telefund truck.

I would just like to say that as a Democrat, Shanna's article on the GOP was grossly uninformed, and maybe she should get a new pair of glasses, so she can see both sides of an issue.

Hi, I've called like ten times, do you recognize my voice by now?

To all you guys who are complaining about there being two displays for women about AIDS: just think of it this way. We saved up all the money from all the times we were denied birth control and used it to buy another display.

My sister's roommate just asked me what Captain Morgan is.

PERSPECTIVES

Medicinal pot case has merit

THE LANTERN
OHIO STATE U.

COLUMBUS, Ohio – On Monday the U.S. Supreme Court heard arguments regarding medicinal marijuana and the role of the federal ban on marijuana.

Whichever way the court decides, the decision will directly affect thousands of seriously ill individuals in 11 states where medicinal marijuana is legal. Whether these individuals will be able to live in a state of lessened pain as they do now will be up to the justices.

Marijuana prohibition has enough negative consequences, like the prosecution of thousands with drug-related charges and the consumption of billions of tax-payers' dollars.

It was President Jimmy Carter who said, "Penalties against possession of a drug should not be more damaging to an individual than the use of the drug itself. Nowhere is this more clear to me than in the laws against possession of marijuana in private for personal use."

The most tragic consequence of the U.S. war on drugs is denying seriously ill patients the benefits that marijuana can provide.

The symptoms that marijuana cures are not simply discomfort from headaches and sprained ankles. Furthermore, medicinal marijuana is not solely an excuse for people to get high. Instead, marijuana relieves the terrible symptoms of life-threatening and terminal illnesses

More than 60 health organizations, over 5,000 years of medical use and thousands of U.S. citizens using medicinal marijuana can't all be wrong.

Bush trip to Canada helps

TUFTS DAILY
TUFTS U.

MEDFORD, Mass. – Canada, our long-ignored neighbor, is getting some well-deserved attention. President George W. Bush's trip is an attempt to patch up relations, after they were strained by Canada for not supporting the war in Iraq. Hopefully this trip will show that Canada can remain an ally of the United States without agreeing on all of its policies.

No one expected Bush to go to Ottawa and apologize for military actions in Iraq. But at least he voiced his respect for the Canadian peoples' opinions, which were overwhelmingly against the war in Iraq. The U.S. government needs to learn how to work with people of varying opinions a little better, and this was a good start.

A diversity of opinions forms the best ideas and policies.

TO THE EDITOR

U.N. accountability very low

Editor,

Here it is plain and simple for all you U.N. lovers.

If George W. Bush had said that the 9/11 panel will be done by his staff and released to him only, everyone would have been in an uproar about how illegitimate it would be.

So you cannot say it is OK for the United Nations to investigate itself on maybe the biggest financial scandal in history, release it only to Kofi Annan, let him decide what the public deserves to know and expect an honest report with full disclosure.

So wake up, smell the crap coming from the United Nations and realize this is an institution with limited potential, and accounting is not something that they can be trusted to do.

Southern Cal knocks Cats out of NCAA tournament

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team was eliminated Friday in the second round of the NCAA Tournament by Southern California, losing in three games, 30-19, 30-25 and 30-19.

The No. 23 Wildcats finish the 2004 season with a 20-11 record, the sixth-straight year K-State has won at least 20 matches. No. 8 Southern California advances to the Sweet Sixteen with a record of 21-5.

"I thought we played good volleyball," Coach Suzie Fritz said. "This was a hard team to defend, but we did what we could. We had a hard time going up against such a quick attack. It was hard to slow the game down and get into a rhythm."

The Trojans used that quick attack to hit .457 for the match, led by Keao Burdine, who hit .533 with 19 kills. K-State, meanwhile, only hit .178 and had just six team blocks in defense of the Southern California offensive attack.

"It is disappointing; we have been a good team with good defense all year," Fritz said. "To their (the Trojans) credit, they played very well. I think our team played the best we could have."

Seniors outside hitter Vali Hejjas, setter Gabby Guerre and middle blocker Lisa Martin ended their careers at K-State, with Hejjas turning in 11 kills, while Guerre had 32 assists and six digs and Martin added six kills and two blocks.

Junior outside hitter Agata Rezende had 10 kills on .450 hitting, and freshman libero Angie Lastra led K-State with 10 digs and three service aces.

Fritz said the Cats were ready for the Trojans, but they just couldn't get it done against the defending two-time NCAA champs.

"I don't think I would have done anything differently," Fritz said. "Early on we were a little tentative and you can't be tentative against a team like this, you have to be aggressive. We had a good plan coming in, but we couldn't execute it effectively."

Ending the season with a loss always hurts, but Hejjas said the team improved and grew throughout the year to have a successful 2004.

"We are a better volleyball team now for what we have done," Hejjas said. "We have become more of a team and a better one."

Volleyball season provides fond memories

KENT HILDEBRAND

The K-State women's volleyball team's season came to an end Friday and with it, so did my time as its writer.

It was August, and like any sports reporter in Manhattan in August, my first concern was with the football team. But not everyone can cover football, and I was happy to have a chance to report on one of the other defending Big 12 Champions.

What I quickly found out, though, was K-State volleyball should probably be one of the most coveted beats around for sports writers. And not just because of the spandex shorts.

No, the Wildcats didn't repeat as Big 12 Champs, they didn't finish ranked in the top-15, and they didn't beat Nebraska. But, while the football team struggled, the volleyball team continued its growth as one of the nation's premier programs, going to the NCAA Tournament for the ninth-straight year, winning 20 matches for the sixth-straight year and finishing the regular season ranked No. 23 in the country.

The Wildcats did all this with a very young and inexperienced team trying to fill the void of departed

Wildcats suffer home upset to unranked Liberty

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With preseason All-American Kendra Wecker hobbled by an injured ankle and on crutches, No. 19 K-State limped to its worst home loss in almost seven years, as Liberty upset the Wildcats 77-56 on Saturday.

It marked the first time in 104 games Wecker did not start. The senior hurt her ankle when she landed awkwardly in the semifinal game of the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic – an 84-50 win over New Hampshire on Friday.

Senior Megan Mahoney, who led the Wildcats with 18 points and nine rebounds, said she did not want to blame the Wildcats' loss on the absence of Wecker.

"Obviously, we miss her as a team out there, but I don't think that just because Kendra was gone, that's why we lost," Mahoney said. "We just didn't work, and that's something you can do no matter who's on the floor. It was just lacking tonight, and I don't know if that's because Kendra was gone. I just think it was something that we didn't bring tonight."

The Lady Flames won behind the strong inside-outside game of 6-foot-8 center Katie Feenstra and guard Kristal Tharp. The duo combined for 48 points, helping end K-State's run of 35 consecutive regular season home wins.

Coach Deb Patterson said the play of Feenstra and Tharp carried Liberty to the win.

"I thought they really stepped up," Patterson said. "You could see their hunger, their aggressiveness. They played with great intelligence and great passion."

K-State's Laurie Koehn struggles to gain possession of a rebound during the second half of Saturday's championship game against Liberty. The Wildcats lost 56-77 to finish the tournament one-and-one and with a second-place finish.

Junior Jessica McFarland, who earned her first career start in place of Wecker, said it was a struggle to guard Feenstra.

"She's a big girl," McFarland said. "She definitely is one of the best post players I think I've ever played against, and I give her credit because her game is good. She's got a nice little left-handed hook shot."

K-State (4-2) never led in the game, as Liberty opened up with a 10-2 lead.

K-State trailed at halftime 34-25, but went on a 10-2 run to start the second half to pull to 36-35. Then, Liberty (3-2) responded with a 21-2 run to put the game out of reach.

K-State struggles without Wecker

By Anthony Mendoza

The only words muttered by the fans were, "oh no."

Nearly five minutes into Friday night's win against New Hampshire, senior forward Kendra Wecker took on two defenders alone on a breakaway. She stopped for a 15-foot jumper, nailed it, but in the process came down on a defender's foot and sprained her left ankle.

On her back, pounding the floor and tears flowing from her eyes, the Big 12 Preseason Conference Player of the Year was helped off the court and never returned to the game.

K-State went on to win the game over New Hampshire, but the results were far from good in the Wildcats' next game without Wecker, as the Wildcats fell 77-56 to Liberty in Saturday's Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic championship game.

Coach Deb Patterson said Wecker's status is day-to-day.

Junior center Jessica McFarland started at forward in place of Wecker in the loss to Liberty, and Patterson said the decision was not made until the morning of the game.

"This morning after evaluating and realizing the physical strength and size and mismatch scenarios that Liberty was going to present, I decided to go with McFarland this morning," Patterson said. "I thought she really did a nice job in the first half in terms of defending and being physical. Once she started to get into foul trouble, things changed, but I like what she brought to the floor defensively in the first half."

McFarland played all but three minutes of the first half. She scored two points, blocked a shot, dished out three assists from the high post and grabbed two offensive rebounds. McFarland finished the game with five points, six rebounds and three assists.

McFarland said the only player who played well in the loss was Megan Mahoney, who finished with a team-high 18 points, nine rebounds and two assists.

"Somebody's going to have to step up if Wecker's out, and I don't think anyone with the exception of Megan probably did that," McFarland said. "We need to work on being the one to step up. Today, I think we had spurts of it here and there,

Cats look to stay unbeaten against Oakland

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's basketball team takes the court at 7 tonight, looking to remain undefeated after a week off as the Wildcats face Oakland at Bramlage Coliseum.

A win over the Grizzlies (0-5) would give K-State (4-0) its best start since the 1997-98 season, when the Wildcats started the year 9-0 under former head coach Tom Asbury.

Coming off a 76-42 win over Arkansas-Pine Bluff on Nov. 29, Coach Jim Wooldridge said tonight's contest and the team's first road game this Saturday at Wyoming will test his squad.

"These will be good games for us to show improvement and tell us where we are and where we need to go," Wooldridge said.

At first glance, fans might think winless Oakland should be a cakewalk for the Wildcats. However, though they are without a victory, the Grizzlies come into Bramlage battle-tested.

Oakland has played a brutal non-conference schedule thus far this season, losing to the likes of No. 5 Illinois – who knocked off No. 1 Wake Forest last week – Xavier and Missouri on the road as well as Marquette at home.

The Grizzlies are led by senior swingman Rawie Marshall, who averages 19.6 points per game but shoots just 38 percent from the field. Senior forward Cortney Scott, at 6-foot-6, 260 pounds, provides a load down low for Oakland, averaging 15.6 points and seven rebounds a game.

As for the Wildcats, Wooldridge said after last Monday's game the team has much room to improve ,as it makes its way through the non-conference schedule – especially on the offensive end.

"I think we've played some pretty good defense overall in these four games. We're trying to execute better offensively where we're all on the same page and understanding how we have to play," Wooldridge said. "We're doing a little bit more of that. The ball's moving a little bit better at times. We're not trying to score on one side

Staff Reports

Football | K-State stops recruitment of linebacker

Coach Bill Snyder announced the K-State football program had stopped recruiting an ex-convict after it was reported he gave the Wildcats an oral commitment on Friday.

Snyder

Marcus Raines, a 6-foot-3, 230-pound linebacker from Pasadena (Calif.) City College, is rated the No. 13 junior college prospect in the nation by Rivals.com, but it appears his checkered past has caused Snyder to decide to end recruitment efforts.

At the age of 17, Raines pleaded to involuntary manslaughter after a May 2000 attack in which a high school classmate was killed

When it was reported Raines was committing to K-State, the subject became a hot topic on sports-talk radio.

In a release issued Friday night, Snyder stated the program's intentions regarding Raines.

"This is a heart-breaking event, which saddens so many people," Snyder said. "Due to NCAA rules, I am unable to mention the name of the young man who is the subject of so much controversy. But I do feel the need to announce that we have ceased recruiting him."

Snyder continued his explanation for the school's decision.

"The young man in question visited our campus two weeks ago and impressed those he came in contact with as a pleasant and compassionate young man who was truly motivated to move forward with his life. He shared with us that he had grown up in a very rough environment and was anxious to get away to college for a better life," Snyder said.

"The information that was shared with us when the young man was on our campus is somewhat different from what is now being reported in the media. I am pained over the incident and accept responsibility for not having all of the necessary information to make a more informed decision."

Football | USC, Sooners to play for national title

Southern California and Oklahoma finished atop the final Bowl Championship Series standings Sunday and will meet in the Orange Bowl on Jan. 4 in a title game that might not produce a unanimous national champion.

Auburn, which finished 12-0 just like the Trojans and Sooners, finished third in the BCS points system that relies on The Associated Press and coaches polls, plus computer ratings. So the Tigers will have to settle for a Sugar Bowl berth against Virginia Tech on Jan. 3.

California was left out altogether after Texas passed the Golden Bears and moved into fourth in the final BCS standings. The Longhorns will play Big Ten co-champion Michigan in the Rose Bowl.

Utah officially became the first team from a non-BCS conference to receive a bid to one of the four $14 million bowl games, earning a spot in the Fiesta Bowl against Big East representative Pittsburgh .

Colorful glass art works on exhibit at Beach Museum

By Christin E. Kuchem
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A colorful array of Venetian glass artwork by the world famous Lino Tagliapietra is on display at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

The exhibit, "Giving Life to Glass: The Art of Lino Tagliapietra" will run until Jan. 16.

Tagliapietra is known world-wide as a forefather in his medium who helped to make glassblowing a medium accepted as a studio art.

Bill North, the Beach Museum's senior curator, was involved in the planning of the exhibit and said Tagliapietra has affected the art community.

"There have always been many people working in glass, but they were not studio artists. These are people who worked in factories, executing the designs of others. There were very few working in glass who conceived themselves as fine artists, and that's where Lino comes in," North said.

Tagliapietra was born on the Italian island of Murano, an island with historical links to world-famous Venetian glass.

"Lino's importance stems from his birthplace. Because of his ties to Murano, he was taught the secret tricks of the trade, secrets that people in other parts of the world couldn't figure out, but tried to master with many failed attempts," North said.

In his youth, Tagliapietra quit school to pursue an apprenticeship with Muranese master, Archimede Seguso. At the age of 21, he was given maestro status.

"It was later on, when Lino really made a name for himself. He has been especially generous with the sharing of secrets and ideas. He has worked alongside Americans and other glass artists around the world, letting them in on the secrets of technique," North said.

The Beach Museum owns two glass pieces by American artist Dale Chihuly, who was significantly affected by the teachings of Tagliapietra. This tie between Chihuly and Tagliapietra prompted the exhibit, said Katherine Schlageck, education and public services supervisor for the museum.

"When Dale Chihuly created a piece for us, we decided that a representation of Tagliapietra's work would also be a great addition for the museum. Because the two artists are friends and because of the influence, we purchased two pieces from Tagliapierta for our permanent collection. And then this idea for the exhibit evolved, and it's been an amazing success," Schlageck said.

Kristy Carter, junior in secondary education, works as a gallery attendant for the exhibition.

"I think we are really lucky to have Tagliapierta's work here. With Chihuly as one of his students, it's just great for our museum to have such prominent artists represented," Carter said.

Carter said "The Endeavor," a work consisting of 35 colorful, boat-shaped elements suspended in air, has been among the most favored by visitors.

An educational video of Tagliapietra in his glass-blowing studio is shown at the exhibit. There is also a catalog of his works and a historical essay available at the showing. Tours can also be arranged for groups of 10 or more.

Schlageck said the museum staff is pleased by the attendance the show has received since its opening in October.

"We have had marketing surveys done showing that the attendance has been amazing," Schlageck said. "But it is simply fun to hear every time someone turns a corner, there's another 'ohh' and 'ahh.'"

Students flock to Union for chance to meet reality stars

Reality television made a big splash at K-State last Friday afternoon.

Shavonda Billingslea and Landon Luech, castmembers from the 15th season of MTV's "The Real World," met students from around campus Friday afternoon in the K-State Student Union.

Both Billingslea and Lueck came to campus to not only promote the show but also to promote spring break trips through StudentCity.com. The campaign was a struggle, as students were more interested in meeting the celebrities than taking the vacations.

Anne Elliot, senior in international marketing and Spanish, said she thought it was exciting to have celebrities in campus.

"They aren't famous by any means, but the concept of them being here is pretty cool," Elliot said.

Elliot, along with her sorority sisters from Kappa Alpha Theta, were there to catch a glimpse of what the casts members were really like.

"Watching 'The Real World' at our house is almost a ritual," she said. "We watch it once or twice a week."

However, Elliot isn't alone. Several other people, including Paula Perdomo, junior in psychology, also watch it regularly.

But for Perdomo, the reasons to view the show are personal.

"I just like to know that people have more drama in their life than me," Perdomo said. "It makes me feel better.

"I also wanted to see what Landon was like in person versus his character on the show," she said.

"I like that he seems to be himself. He shows his true colors. Plus, the cast members are hot."

Both Billingslea and Lueck autographed pictures and talked about their future travels with students through spring break trips.

Students who want to rub elbows with the cast of "The Real World," "Road Rules," "Jackass" and the girls from MAXIM should consider traveling with StudentCity.com, Billingslea said.

Kevin Miller, senior in animal science, said the opportunity to mingle with celebrities is just what he needs.

"I am definitely interested in traveling with celebrities for Spring Break," Miller said.

"I would like to know the truth, like what they did with other cast members and their experiences on the show," he said.

Springsteen to boost local N.J. economy

With Santa Claus coming to town, Bruce Springsteen is hoping that holiday gifts will be purchased in the shore city where the Boss rose to fame.

Springsteen

Springsteen is offering 10 people a pair of tickets to his Dec. 19 show at Harry's Roadhouse, along with the opportunity to meet him. But the only way to enter the contest is to visit a shop in Asbury Park.

The contest is the latest effort by Springsteen to help local businesses, said Eileen Chapman, president of the Merchants Guild of Asbury Park.

"Bruce has gotten onstage and listed all the merchants in Asbury Park, actually gone down the whole list and encouraged people at his concerts to shop the stores in Asbury," Chapman said.

Fans have until the end of business on Dec. 18 to enter. Winners will be notified by telephone that night.

Mormon choir cancels overseas trips

The Mormon Tabernacle Choir has canceled its planned tour of northern Europe next year because of concerns about terrorism, and instead will tour the Northwest.

The 360-voice choir was scheduled to make a summer tour by ship of Denmark, Sweden, Norway and Finland.

However, Gordon B. Hinckley, president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, decided the trip would make the group an easy target for terrorists.

The tour was first changed to England, Scotland and Wales, with a stopover in Paris. But that, too, was deemed too dangerous and now the choir will visit cities in northern California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada and Idaho.

The church has an extensive security network that constantly monitors the global situation, especially as it could affect the 60,000 Mormon missionaries serving in more than 150 countries.

Choir members took the change in stride.

"No matter where you go, traveling with the choir is still a treat and a blessing," said tenor Douglas Smith of Salt Lake City.

People's Choice Awards adds new categories

The People's Choice Awards have added new categories to the upcoming ceremony, including favorite movies, favorite smile and favorite cartoon star.

Garner

There were 14 new categories, including favorite overall movie, favorite movie drama, comedy and sequel.

Additional new awards include favorite hair (Courtney Cox Arquette, Penelope Cruz, Jennifer Garner, Kate Hudson and Charlize Theron,) and favorite "look."

The nomination and awards process, formerly based on a national poll, has been revised to be compiled by Entertainment Weekly, the People's Choice production team and pop culture fans. The public can choose the winners online at www.pcavote.com.

Voting closes Dec. 13.

"I thought Liberty just beat us in every aspect of the game tonight," Patterson said. "I can't come away from this game and judge this game and say that we competed well. This wasn't a close basketball game when it ended. We didn't just lose, we lost in a big way."

The loss marked the first time since 1997 K-State failed to win its home tournament. The Wildcats had won 14 straight games in their home tournament.

While the Wildcats wait for Wecker's return, Patterson said the loss will sting, but she hopes her team can rebound quickly.

"I think you come off the floor after a loss like this and, to me, its kind of like walking into a cold shower," Patterson said. "It should definitely grab your attention.

"I think all you really have to do is look at the stat sheet and immediately, as a player in our program, I think you would bring a real high level of emotion to your next opportunity to step in the gym and be better and compete harder, and I trust that our basketball team will do that."

A key part of improvement on offense is the play of freshman point guard Clent Stewart. Stewart had a season-high 15 points and was 5-of-5 on 3-pointers in the Wildcats' win over Arkansas-Pine Bluff.

Though, Stewart seems to be stepping up offensively, Wooldridge said every player on the team needs to play well each night for the Wildcats to be successful.

"We can't have two or three guys play well and two or three guys not," Wooldridge said. "We're going to have to have a lot of guys play well and up to their abilities at a higher level as we go into the next week."

Sure, there were more losses and a few growing pains, but this team beat the teams it was supposed to and even swept higher-ranked Texas A&M at home and beat No. 16 Missouri twice. They beat rival Kansas, also a tournament team, for the 20th straight time.

Four Wildcats – seniors outside hitter Vali Hejjas, setter Gabby Guerre and middle blocker Lisa Martin and freshman libero Angie Lastra – garnered postseason Big 12 honors. Hejjas and Guerre were named first team All-Big 12, Martin made the second team and Lastra was Big 12 Libero of the Year.

The Wildcats also maintained their reputation as stars off the court, with six players named to the Academic All-Big 12 team.

For seniors Guerre, Hejjas, Martin and outside hitter Michaela Franklin, it was their last season to play in front of the crowds at Ahearn Field House, and they made sure it was a memorable one, providing leadership to a squad with nine newcomers.

For Coach Suzie Fritz, it was another season cementing her as one of the country's top coaches, as she now has 91 wins in just four seasons with K-State.

For the 13 returning Wildcats, another year of experience has been added and team chemistry has been built along with a foundation for next season.

For me, it was a great opportunity as a sports writer. From my first interview with Coach Fritz, when I was warned beforehand that she didn't like reporters who ask stupid questions, it's been quite a journey.

There was Fritz and the players, who were great, politely tolerating my stupid questions all year, a couple fun road trips to Lawrence and Lincoln, Neb., the matches at Ahearn and a chance to know the Irsik family, who told me the moving story of their daughter, Terina, for whom the new volleyball court is named.

So congratulations on your 2004 season, Wildcats, and on behalf of the fans and myself, thanks for the memories.

WECKER | Basketball squad works to bring in bench players

but we didn't do it for the whole 40 minutes."

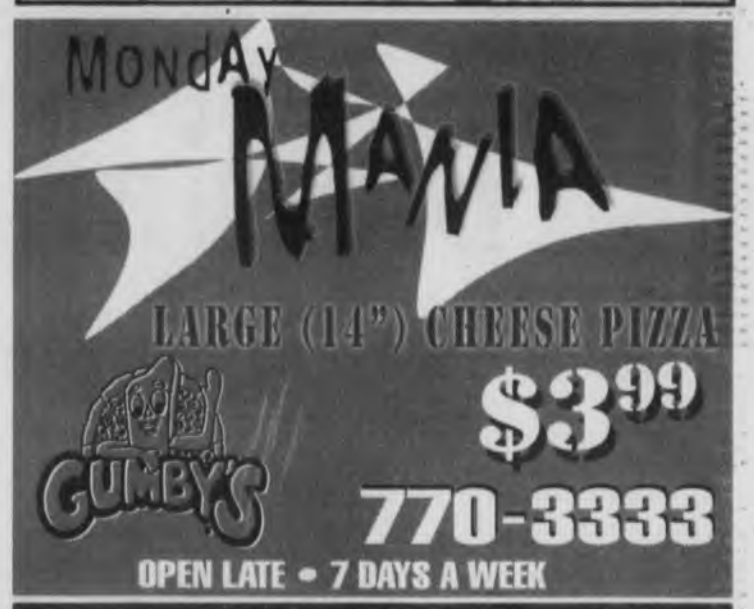
After the New Hampshire game, Patterson said she did not know who was going to fill in for Wecker, but that McFarland, senior center Brie Madden and freshman forward Shana Wheeler would get significant playing time in the star's place.

While Wheeler was never a factor against Liberty, senior center Madden started the game slowly for K-State. Madden scored all of her six points in the second half and finished with four rebounds and two assists.

Madden said K-State needs to learn how to play without Wecker and the loss of her was not the only reason for Saturday's defeat.

"Teams every year lose great players, and you just have to get over it. It was one game without her and we didn't get the job done, but I don't necessarily think that was the whole issue," Madden said. "We have a whole lot of other things we didn't get done."

Quick glance



Wecker's replacements

Kendra Wecker is averaging 20.6 points per game and 7.4 rebounds a game.

Here's how her replacements did against Liberty:

- Brie Madden, six points and four rebounds
- Jessica McFarland, five points and six rebounds
- Shana Wheeler, zero points and one rebound

City of Manhattan nears job creation goal number

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The City of Manhattan has not quite reached its target of creating 1,357 new jobs, but the community is not far off.

By Dec. 31, 2003, – which was the deadline to meet that goal – there were 1,265 new jobs. By June 1, there were 1,319 new jobs, Diane Stoddard, assistant city manager, said.

The new jobs are part of the economic development program in Manhattan, which started in 1995.

"I think with regard to every area we are doing a great job," Stoddard said.

Although the target was not reached, Stoddard said the amount of jobs created is still good, because the economy is in a recession.

City commissioners said the numbers were not really accurate for the economic development program at the Nov. 23 meeting.

Mayor Brad Everett said part of the reason commissioners felt the numbers are inaccurate was because Sykes left Manhattan, and Alorica moved into Sykes' old building.

Money was given to Sykes for the economic development program but not to Alorica, so the commissioners thought those jobs shouldn't be counted, he said.

"Some of the commissioners wanted to have a clearer picture of the numbers," he said.

Although money was not directly given to Alorica, the community is still benefitting from the company being here, Stoddard said.

She said Sykes built the building Alorica is in now; otherwise there wouldn't be a place to house Alorica.

"That just wouldn't have been there," Stoddard said.

At the beginning of the program, the money was given to businesses without a way to make companies accountable, Everett said. Now there are provisions allowing the city to receive money back for not meeting their target.

"We just reworded some things," he said. "It safeguards the community from getting burned."

Soldier charged with murder

By Paul Garwood
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Spc. Brent May, 22, of Salem, Ohio, faced a military court Monday charged with murdering an Iraqi man in Baghdad's Sadr City, an impoverished Shiite Muslim quarter that saw fierce clashes with U.S. troops and insurgents this year.

May is attached to Company C, 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry Regiment, from Fort Riley, Kan. He was charged in September on three counts of premeditated murder.

But at Monday's hearing, officials ordered May to face just one charge. It was not immediately clear why the number of charges were reduced.

May did not enter a plea during the Article 32 case, the military equivalent of a civilian preliminary hearing, and was not called to testify. But five members of his unit who witnessed the alleged killing gave evidence to military defense and prosecution lawyers.

The Army has charged six Fort Riley soldiers with murder in recent months – two for killings in Kansas and four for deaths in Iraq.

Consulate in Saudi Arabia attacked

By Faiza Saleh Ambah
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JIDDAH, Saudi Arabia – In a bold attack, Islamic militants threw explosives at the gate of the heavily guarded U.S. consulate in Jiddah on Monday, then forced their way into the building and held civilians at gunpoint, prompting a gunbattle. Eight people, including five local staff, were killed in the three-hour assault.

The Interior Ministry said three of the five attackers were killed, with the other two wounded and in custody.

Saudi security officials initially said four Saudi officers also died, but Interior Ministry spokesman Brig. Gen. Mansour al-Turki later told The Associated Press that no officers were killed. He said one was seriously injured.

No Americans were killed or held at gunpoint, and just one American was slightly injured as consulate employees were rushed to a safe area in the compound as the attack began, a State Department official said.

It was the first major strike by militants inside Saudi Arabia

Nicole Reynolds, 3, thinks about what she wants for Christmas as she sits on Santa's lap Monday afternoon at Manhattan Town Center. Santa is listening to what children want for Christmas until Dec. 24.

Santa at Manhattan Town Center hears wishes of young and old alike

Victoria Warren and Travis Nelson, Manhattan residents, smile for a photo with Santa at the Manhattan Town Center. Santa has been working at the mall for five years.

Atley Pankaskie wants a reindeer for Christmas. But Santa Claus told 2-year-old Atley that without his reindeer he wouldn't be able to deliver all his toys.

Atley and his family traveled two hours from Lebo, Kan., to visit Santa at Manhattan Town Center on Monday.

"It wasn't too hard to get them here because I told them Santa was looking for them," Dolcey Pankaskie said of her three sons.

The Pankaskie family has a tradition of visiting Santa at the mall every year.

"He's so good with the kids. He's so like what we would picture the real Santa to be," Dolcey Pankaskie said.

Santa has been at his post for the past five years. His beard is genuinely white, and his suit is his own.

"The children need me, and I need them," he said, laughing.

Santa got his first suit when he was just of high school and had to spray paint his beard silver.

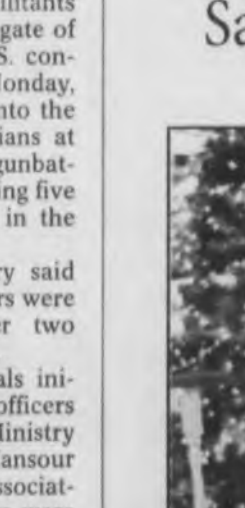
Now, Santa has three teenage daughters in Manhattan, who grew up thinking their father was the real thing.

"I think they always thought I was Santa," he said. "They were really proud that their dad was Santa."

Mandy Mertes, a K-State graduate who serves as Santa's helper, said Santa does his job well.

"He's a great Santa," she said. "He's been doing it for so long. He gives them high fives when they are scared."

He isn't just Santa Claus at the mall.



"It's getting the point where around town I am Santa," he said. "Even parents talk to me like I am Santa."

QUICK QUIZ

With the volleyball and football seasons over, the attention of the Wildcat fan nation turns to the world of collegiate basketball.

But how well do you actually know the 2004-05 Wildcats? Take this quiz to gauge your level of knowledge before you watch another game.

1. Who is head coach of the men's basketball team? (One point)
A. Cliff Rovelto
B. Jim Wooldridge
C. Bo Pellini

2. Who is head coach of the women's basketball team? (One point)
A. Lindsay Breidenthal
B. Ruth Ann Wefald
C. Deb Patterson

3. Where did the men's basketball team play its first four exhibition games this year? (Two points)
A. Hawaii
B. Eastern Europe
C. Canada
D. Latin America

4. Where did forward Jeremiah Massey begin his collegiate basketball career? (Five points)
A. Oxnard Community College (Oxnard, Calif.)
B. Kankakee Community College (Kankakee, Ill.)
C. Cloud County Community College (Concordia, Kan.)
D. Park University (Parkville, Mo.)

5. What is men's basketball coach Jim Wooldridge's alma mater? (Five points)
A. Louisiana State
B. Louisiana Tech
C. Auburn
D. Alabama

6. Which two assistants did Coach Patterson hire in May? (Seven points)
A. Shelley Jarrad and Elaine Elliott
B. Elaine Elliott and Kristin Becker
C. Sue Serafini and Kristin Becker
D. Stephanie White and Shelley Jarrad

7. Who is the women's basketball team's adviser? (Seven points)
A. Pastor Sterling Hudgins
B. Rev. Don Fallon
C. Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco
D. Athletics Director Tim Weiser

8. Where is Wildcat forward Brie Madden from? (Ten points)
A. Lee's Summit, Missouri
B. Sapulpa, Oklahoma
C. Arlington, Texas
D. Sturgis, South Dakota

Answers
1. B 2. C 3. C 4. A 5. B 6. D 7. A 8. C

If you scored zero to five points: You've probably never seen or heard a single K-State basketball game, or you're a KU fan. Either trait would lead to a low quiz score; the difference is that KU fans score low on regular quizzes, too.

If you scored six to 20 points: Welcome to the Wildcat fan nation. The season is young, and your basic knowledge of the men's and women's basketball teams will be helped by attending games later this season.

If you scored 21 to 31 points: You are a seasoned Wildcat fan who knows his or her stuff better than the average fan. Keep up the good work and continue cheering your Cats on this season.

If you scored 32 to 38 points: It's more than likely friends and associates have described you as a "sports junkie." You probably live and breath Wildcat athletics.

Study abroad program adds courses

Instructors preparing courses for programs in Italy, England

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Study abroad is taking the foreign experience one step further by adding several new courses for K-State credit.

Kenneth Holland, associate provost for International Programs, said two programs will be taught by four K-State teachers.

Ann Warren, instructor in the English department, and George Strecker, mathematics instructor, will teach courses in Florence, Italy.

Daniel Hunt and Karen De Bres, professors in art and geography, respectively, will teach courses in London, England.

Holland will be traveling to both locations to teach concentrated classes in political science.

"Both of the study abroad locations have a lot to offer," Holland said. "We selected those two locations based on common preferences of college students."

Most college students prefer to study abroad in Europe, he said.

"Obviously a lot of the U.S. owes its cultural heritage in Europe, with art, music, and writing."

"It just has such concentrated amount of culture," Holland said.

Joni Redmond, senior in English and theater, studied abroad in Spain for a semester. Her experience changed her life and perspectives.

Redmond resided with a host family, and she said being immersed in the culture made her learn a lot.

"Oddly, I was scared about the little things," she said. "I was more concerned about whether my host mom would not know how to dry my clothes in the dryer or how I was going to maintain my braces."

With the new group study abroad approach, K-State students and teachers will live and learn together.

They have time to go to the actual sites where the history was made or the scripts were written.

"Florence is the center of culture for Italy in the middle ages," Holland said. "The nice part of the Florence location is that students will not need transportation because the city is so small."

However, students who go to Florence will join the language center, concentrating on Italian.

During Redmond's study abroad, she learned Spanish for the first time at an international language center.

"At first I was really afraid because my teachers didn't speak any English," she said. "But there were tons of students from all over the world, and we all learned how to communicate with each other with one language."

"I thought it was neat that the only way I could communicate with a Japanese student was through Spanish, not English," Redmond said.

Students who study at the language center typically learn enough of the foreign language to return to K-State with a minor in their language concentration.

The bigger, English-speaking London, however, is also very attractive, too, Holland said.

"Some students aren't as comfortable with learning a foreign language, so London would be a good alternative for them."

London, too, is filled with thousands of years of history and culture that would enhance a student's study abroad experience, Holland said. "It is one of the biggest cities in the world. There is so much to see."

If students want to go explore the cities during their study abroad experience, they get a three day weekend, Nafziger said.

"This should give them lots of time to absorb the culture and enjoy their experiences in another country," Nafziger said.

Redmond said exploring the cities broadened her horizons, and she made several special field trips.

"We are really excited about this change in our program," she said.

"Students interested in the program should drop by our office to get some more information about the abroad experience and scholarship opportunities."

K-State reverts to classes on pre-finals Friday

By Gina Ninemire
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stop day, or not having class the Friday before finals, is something that has been looked forward to in the past.

This Friday, though, the academic calendar showed changes to this well-known tradition and classes will take place.

Al Cochran, provost liaison to both the academic calendar committee and Faculty Senate, said the proposal had to pass through many groups.

The academic calendar committee, the provost, the members of faculty and Student Senate made the proposal to not have classes Friday.

Members from the Student Senate tried to win the stop day vote last year, but were unsuccessful.

"The decision to have a stop day was really fought by the Student Senate last year," said Hayley Urkevich, student body president. "But it has never really been supported by the faculty staff."

Students have mixed feelings about the decision not to have a stop day and think that even though there is scheduled class, many will not attend.

"A lot students are not going to be in class this Friday, so it doesn't matter what the schedule says anyways," Emily Mattingly, senior in English, said.

Mattingly said she does not understand why one day must be cut out of the year.

"Many schools get a whole week off before finals week, so why does one day matter so much?" Mattingly said.

Answers to this pertinent question on why they decided to change things starting this year simply were not available.

The decision was proposed and approved.

This change in the academic calendar looks as if it will be a permanent decision.

Whether or not this schedule change will have any real impact for the academic year, will be determined.

Tower construction delayed

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The construction of a clock tower in the Bosco Student Plaza in honor of Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco has been delayed, said Gerald Carter, director of facilities planning and university architect.

Plans for the clock tower were unveiled during a May 6 ceremony in which the Bosco Student Plaza was dedicated.

Carter said construction began more than a week ago. Only the foundation has been completed.

Student Senate vice chair Tyson Moore said they hoped to complete the tower by Thanksgiving break because many members of Bosco's family were set to be in Manhattan for his daughter's wedding.

However some problems arose with the aluminum.

"We ran into a problem with getting the structural system that's been created coated properly," Carter said.

He said they wanted to make sure the aluminum structure has an even finish and looks good.

Carter said they are working on a time to move the structure from Wichita, where it was built.

The tower, which Moore said should be up by the end of this semester, is 24 feet tall and triangular in shape with a clock on each face.

"This is just a tribute to all Dr. Bosco has done for K-State and for students," Moore said. "It's something that would just really add to the plaza."

FBI letter details concerns about treatment

By Paisley Dodds
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico – FBI agents witnessed "highly aggressive" interrogations and mistreatment of terror suspects at the U.S. prison camp in Cuba starting in 2002 – more than a year before the prison abuse scandal broke in Iraq – according to a letter a senior Justice Department official sent to the Army's top criminal investigator.

The FBI official suggested the Pentagon didn't act on FBI complaints about the incidents, including a female interrogator grabbing a detainee's genitals and bending back his thumbs.

Another complaints was a prisoner was gagged with duct tape and a third where a dog was used to intimidate a detainee who later showed signs of "extreme psychological trauma."

Thomas Harrington, an FBI counterterrorism expert who led a team of investigators at Guantanamo Bay, wrote the letter dated July 14, 2004, to Maj. Gen. Donald J. Ryder, the Army's chief law enforcement officer who's investigating abuses at U.S.-run prisons in Afghanistan, Iraq and at Guantanamo.

TO THE POINT

Officials should reconsider stop day before finals

K-State students enjoyed an additional opportunity last spring to relax and study before finals week.

That luxury was short-lived, as the academic calendar has reverted to holding classes on the Friday preceding finals week. That decision should be reconsidered.

Any new information introduced as little as three days before a final examination is likely to be forgotten or cause other lessons to be forgotten.

K-State has made significant efforts in the past to assure students a manageable schedule of coursework before finals week, and leaving the Friday before final exams open as a "stop day" is a helpful part of the dead week.

Providing this day would be helpful to graduating seniors, whose commencement activities occur before finals week and detract from their study time.

Many classes use the Friday before finals week as a review session, and most once-a-week courses are unaffected.

Using the Wednesday and Thursday course periods as the final regular class times provides students extra time to prepare for exams, and faculty can use the time to catch up on grading of major papers, projects and other assignments.

While some students will not use a day off from classes to study, the benefits to those who use their time wisely are invaluable.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Refinancing America

United States needs to focus on lessening national debt

CHAZ STEIMEL

Like many college students, I have bounced a check. Of course, after doing that I learned running a debt is painful.

Thankfully, my bank did not resort to loan-shark-style collection methods, and two weeks later I paid off the collected debt, pulled my accounts back into positive holdings and still had both knee caps intact.

As I look back on the whole incident, I wonder what it would be like to act as the United States does, being able to rack up trillions of dollars in debt and not worry about it.

Would that not be nice? It sure would, but as I thought more about it, it dawned on me that just as the bank was interested in getting its money back, there must be a lot of foreigners wanting their money back.

This compelled me to do some quick research and, lo and behold, the United States has a looming problem on the horizon, one with more at stake than a $30 overdraft charge.

According to the Wall Street Journal of Dec. 2, the United States will borrow around $670 billion dollars from the rest of the world this year, or enough money to permanently pay for the Bush twins' keg draining habit.

That number, or the current account deficit, is basically the combination of our trade deficit and our federal budget deficit. Initially, running a deficit that large is not a problem; in fact, it allows the United States to consume at a rate higher than our economy permits which is good (it means more stuff for us).

The problem comes with the fact that it is unsustainable.

"Foreign Affairs," a leading journal in international relations, contended in its September and October 2004 issue that the current U.S. account deficit was sustainable for at most four or five years, and without change, when that time was up the United States was doomed for a harsh landing, with considerable economic strife.

Or, in other words, if things do not change, we're boned.

Like the Schwartz, for every downside there is an upside. Things re changing.

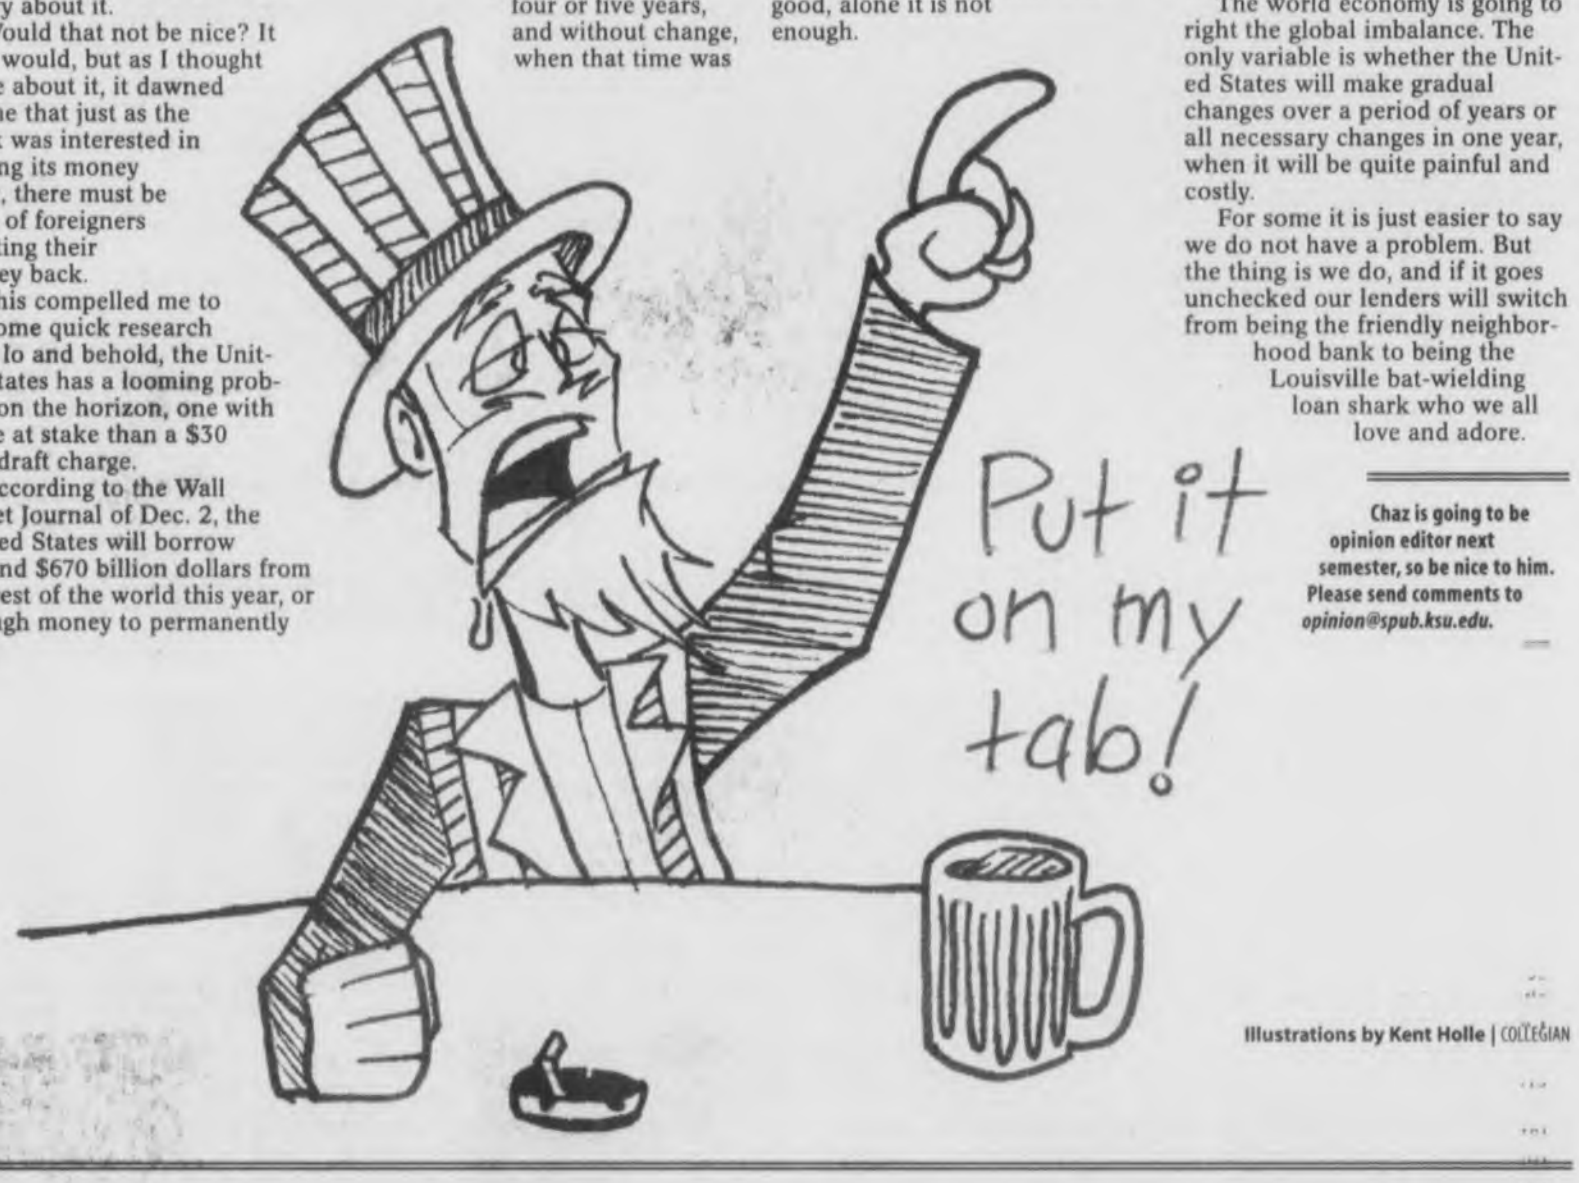
The Washington Post Weekly of Dec. 5 reported that so far this year, with the help of the weak dollar, U.S. exports have increased 24 percent since 2002 (when the dollar decline began), and alone this year we exported $70 billion more than last year, a 15 percent increase, thus narrowing our trade deficit. However good, alone it is not enough.



Our federal budget deficits and foreign countries' adverse economic policies still remain a problem that needs to be addressed by the United States.

Initially, President Bush needs to focus on persuading other countries to change their economic policies. At the top of the list is China, who needs to devalue their currency. Good luck with that one.

More realistically, President Bush can at least focus on balancing the budget. No longer is it the election year, the time of the half-hearted promises. Mr. President, balance this budget before you rack even more debt that my children and I will have to pay off.

The world economy is going to right the global imbalance. The only variable is whether the United States will make gradual changes over a period of years or all necessary changes in one year, when it will be quite painful and costly.

For some it is just easier to say we do not have a problem. But the thing is we do, and if it goes unchecked our lenders will switch from being the friendly neighborhood bank to being the Louisville bat-wielding loan shark who we all love and adore.

Islam will continue to inspire globally

Jesus shall return soon to the world. Being a Muslim, it's my belief.

I desperately wish for this to happen in my lifetime. If I am lucky enough in the crowd of his millions of fans, I would find a way to approach him and see him face-to-face and kiss his hands with all of my love and passions.

ALTAF KARIM

The Qur'an (Koran), the Holy Scripture of Islam, says Jesus was not crucified or killed, but God raised Jesus up to Himself. It also mentions some other events of his life.

Famous Islamic scholar Harun Yahya says, "These events have not yet happened. Thus, Jesus' second coming to earth is a prerequisite for these events to happen."

His second arrival is inevitable for two reasons.

First, peace, solidarity, and justice are disappearing in today's chaotic world. Helpless and oppressed people are begging God for a defender and savior. They are caught between corrupt politicians and the terrifying arrogance of superpowers' leaders.

Second, Jesus will unify all religions by removing conflicts among them, discarding their corrupt versions, and finally rescuing them from their self-proclaimed custodians. I would not wonder if he declares Islam as the ultimate religion of the modern world and Qur'an as the final version of all existing Holy Scriptures.

The Qur'an has been successfully holding its original and unchanged script for 14 centuries.

God Himself guaranteed its preservation. He claims in the fifteenth chapter (AL-HIJR) of this holy book, "I have, without doubt, sent down the Message; and I will assuredly guard it (from corruption)."

You would not find any proof of corruption in Qur'anic script if you compare its recently published copies with the 700-year-old Qur'an placed at the British Museum Library, or with two 1,400-year-old copies authenticated by the Prophet of Islam himself (peace be upon him). One of them is placed at Tashkent Museum in Uzbekistan and the other is placed at Topkapi Museum in Istanbul, Turkey.

Memorizing the whole script of Qur'an is a common practice among many Muslims around the world.

This phenomenon has been going on uninterrupted since the revelation of Qur'an. That's why this book is fully preserved in its original form. It's a living miracle of God that proves the truthfulness of the Qur'anic claims and the credibility of Islam as an ultimate and supreme religion.

More interestingly, there has not been any conflict between Islam and science in its whole history. Contrary to other religions, Islam always supported and embraced revolutionary scientific ideas.

In Qur'an, God repeatedly urges people to get rid of their ignorance by acquiring knowledge, using scientific method of reasoning,and studying the world around them.

The scientific spirit of Islam shaped different cultures and promoted civilization in medieval times. Mathematical ideas like spherical trigonometry, decimal system, various algorithms, and Algebra were invented by Muslim scholars in Baghdad centuries ago. Algebra and algorithm are both Arabic words.

Qur'an also inspired non-Muslims scientists of the modern world. For example, in chapter 51 (ADH-DHARIYAT), God says, "and of everything I have created pairs that you may take heed."

Pakistani scientist and noble laureate Prof. Abdus Salam took inspiration from this Qur'anic verse and established a thought that two different forces can be represented as a pair emerged from a single entity.

So he put forward his famous theory (Weinberg-Salam model) explaining the unification of two fundamental forces of nature.

It would not be wrong to say that Islam has a great capacity to appreciate and advocate stem cell research and advancements in human genetics. Qur'an itself describes things like human embryology, creation of the universe from the Big Bang, solar orbits, geology, and oceanography.

Islam is not merely a religion, but it provides humanity a complete code of life. It's a religion of equality, peace and prosperity. It says that all people are from Adam and Eve. It strongly denounces all types of racism and all forms of terrorism.

So I'm waiting for Jesus, who will advocate Islam and monotheism. He will finally heal the world that is being butchered and terrorized by superpowers and their bully politics of imperialism.

Altaf will advocate for people in need of freedom and justice around the world. Please send comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Bush pushes for intel bill

By Jesse Holland
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – President Bush pressed Congress to pass legislation to revamp the nation's intelligence agencies on Monday, despite the concerns of some House Republicans who are holding up the bill.

"I believe we've addressed the concerns, by far, of the majority of the members of both the House and the Senate," Bush said during an Oval Office meeting with Iraq's interim President Ghazi al-Yawer.

"I call upon the Congress to pass the intelligence bill," Bush said. "It's a good piece of legislation. It is a necessary piece of legislation. It's a piece of legislation that is important for the security of our country."

Congressional Democrats say there are enough votes to push the bill through if Republicans will allow a vote.

Democrats in the House and Senate say the bill to overhaul the intelligence community by creating a national intelligence director will pass if House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., brings the compromise up Monday, when the GOP-controlled House returns for a year-end wrap-up.

But Republicans say objections from House Armed Services Committee chairman Duncan Hunter, R-Calif., and Judiciary Committee chairman James Sensenbrenner, R-Wis., have held up the bill and could force the issue to wait until next year.

Hastert refused to bring the bill to a vote before Thanksgiving because of their objections and has yet to reveal his plans.

Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said he supports the House-Senate compromise, but "I do believe it can be improved."

Aside from the intelligence bill, the House must put the final touches on a $388 billion spending measure that was not completed when lawmakers left town before Thanksgiving.

While they are working on that, Hastert will decide whether to force a House vote on creating a national intelligence director position to coordinate the nation's spy agencies and enacting other anti-terror measures. If the House passes the bill, the Senate will reconvene to do the same.

Hunter has expressed concerns the intelligence realignment could interfere with the military's chain of command.

He wants the bill to ensure that the Pentagon retains direct control over the agencies that operate the nation's spy satellites and analyze that information for troops on the battlefield.

The bill's supporters say it would not interfere with those operations.

Sensenbrenner wants the bill to address illegal immigration and what he sees as loopholes in the system.

But President Bush, Republican leaders on Capitol Hill and the members of the Sept. 11 investigative commission have endorsed the intelligence bill.

Bush telephoned House and Senate lawmakers and used his weekly radio address Saturday to press Congress to pass the bill.

Democrats put the blame on Hastert and Bush for not getting House Republicans in line.

"Every day we delay our country is less safe," House Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi of California said on "Fox News Sunday." "Speaker Hastert knows that. The president knows that. They just haven't convinced all of the Republicans."

"The president, who controls both houses of Congress, should use his power," incoming Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid of Nevada added on NBC's "Meet the Press."

If lawmakers fail to pass an overhaul this year, they'll have to start from scratch next year. With the new Congress in January, bills that failed to pass in the current session expire and new lawmakers and committee leaders would have to consider any new legislation.

Master's program gains funds

By Annie Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In October, Rep. Jim Ryun secured $1 million for a leadership program between Fort Leavenworth and K-State.

The program is now in its creative stages.

Director of Government Relations Sue Peterson said the omnibus bill passed Monday contained another $1.4 million for the program.

"It was a relief to get the money," she said. "We feel very fortunate to receive as much as we did."

The money for the program was in a defense appropriations bill that happened to be the only one to pass through the U.S. Congress Oct. 1, Peterson said.

"He had to sell the idea to people not from Kansas," she said. "The program falls into his area of interest, which is the military."

Charles Reagan, Associate to the President, said August 2005 is the target date for the program to be available.

The program will be a Master's level, and the exact nature of it is still under discussion, he said.

"A delegation went to Fort Leavenworth and looked at the curriculum of majors and the needs of the faculty," he said. "We want to leverage the strengths of K-State and the command and general staff college in Fort Leavenworth for the best possible program."

The target audience for the program will be the faculty of Fort Leavenworth, Reagan said.

"We already have a joint Ph.D. program in military history," he said. "We have a long history of cooperative endeavors with them"

Mark Parillo, director for military history and 20th Century studies at K-State, said it will be a multi-disciplinary Master's program in history and political science.

"A bulk of the money we received will be used to hire new faculty," he said. "We currently do not have enough faculty to teach the courses the program would require."

Parillo said the department is working on course flexibility, in order to better serve the faculty who will be participating in the program.

"We are looking at video conferencing at Leavenworth, among other ideas," he said. "Web-based courses would be beneficial to officers that still want to participate, but are stationed in other places during their work."

"The goal is to make the faculty at Fort Leavenworth better instructors and officers," Parillo said.

Judge suspends attorney from court in Westar case for 'hostile conduct'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Kan. – An angry federal judge ordered an attorney defending former Westar Energy Inc. vice president Douglas Lake to stay out of the courtroom for the rest of the trial, after what the judge called his hostile conduct.

U.S. District Judge Julie Robinson, who has quarreled with defense attorneys throughout the trial of Lake and former Westar chief executive David Wittig, accused attorney Christopher Wilson of being disrespectful, disruptive and of trying to intimidate her with icy glares.

"I can't tell you how many times I have come close to citing him for contempt," Robinson said.

The ruling came after attorneys for Lake rested their case Monday. Closing arguments are scheduled for Tuesday.

Lake and Wittig are charged with attempting to loot Westar, the largest electric utility in Kansas. Each man faces 40 counts and a minimum of 10 years in prison.

The problems between Robinson and Wilson started Monday morning, when the judge stopped proceedings to ask him if he had "a problem." Wilson replied that he had a lot of problems. When Robinson told him he was behaving disrespectfully, Wilson stood and disagreed.

After Robinson read jury instructions Monday afternoon, Rich Hathaway, an assistant U.S. attorney, asked that the number of attorneys at the defense table be limited during Tuesday's closing arguments because of what he said were problems with conduct at the defense tables.

Robinson agreed, saying Wilson had been "very disruptive" during the trial. She also accused him of going behind the courtroom law clerks' desk, where he could have observed notes written from Robinson to courtroom staff.

Robinson also criticized Edward Little, lead attorney for the Lake defense team, saying she had never seen attorneys who conducted themselves the way the men had during the trial.

Also Monday, Robinson denied Wittig's and Lake's motion for acquittal and dismissed a motion by Wittig to exclude evidence regarding the tax treatment of personal use of Westar corporate jets.

Lake, who began testifying Nov. 26, was on the stand for only 15 minutes Monday morning. He testified that he was not aware of a lawsuit filed by Westar in 2001 that challenged the Kansas Corporation Commission's jurisdiction over a planned spin-off of Westar's unregulated assets.

In the 40-count indictment, the government contends that the two men stood to make millions on the planned creation of a new company, Westar Industries, through a merger with Public Service Co. of New Mexico.

The government also believes Wittig and Lake planned to saddle the regulated utility with all the debt, and then take new positions and a substantial ownership stake in the unregulated business, Westar Industries.

The defense contends the deal would have been good for shareholders and that there was nothing improper about it. The plan was rejected by the KCC.

Other charges against Wittig and Lake include using corporate aircraft for personal trips without claiming the benefits as taxable income, collecting exorbitant compensation from Westar and using company funds to investigate the backgrounds of employees, regulators and journalists.

The defense argued that Wittig and Lake's actions were disclosed or had legitimate business purposes.

K-State 76, Oakland 69

Holding on to victory

K-State maintains lead to beat Oakland, remain undefeated

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It took nearly 36 minutes for the K-State Wildcats to grab the lead Monday night.

And once they did, they weren't letting go.

Behind senior forward Jeremiah Massey's 24 points and 15 rebounds, and 15 points apiece from junior forward Marques Hayden and sophomore forward Cartier Martin, the Wildcats beat Oakland 76-69 at Bramlage Coliseum.

A barrage of Oakland 3-pointers put the Grizzlies up by as many as 15 points in the first half, but K-State responded with its best field-goal shooting performance of the season (51 percent) and an 11-0 second-half run to pull off the victory.

Though winless, Oakland (0-6) came into the contest having played a rigorous schedule including road trips to Missouri and No. 1 Illinois.

"That was a tough game to win," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "Oakland did what they had to do to give themselves a chance. They got off to a remarkable start to the game, and that boosted their confidence."

Wooldridge said he was never disappointed with his team's effort in the first half despite trailing the Grizzlies.

"The whole night tonight I thought we played hard. I wasn't upset with our team," Wooldridge said. "Oakland just came out and played tremendously in the first half. I think our guys rallied around one another and found a way to win it."

Now holding a 5-0 record, the Wildcats are off to their best start since the 1997-98 season.

After cutting the Oakland lead down to three in the first half and to one point midway through the second half, only to have the Grizzlies extend the margin, the Wildcats took their first lead on a Massey fast-break dunk to make the game 63-61 with 4:12 remaining.

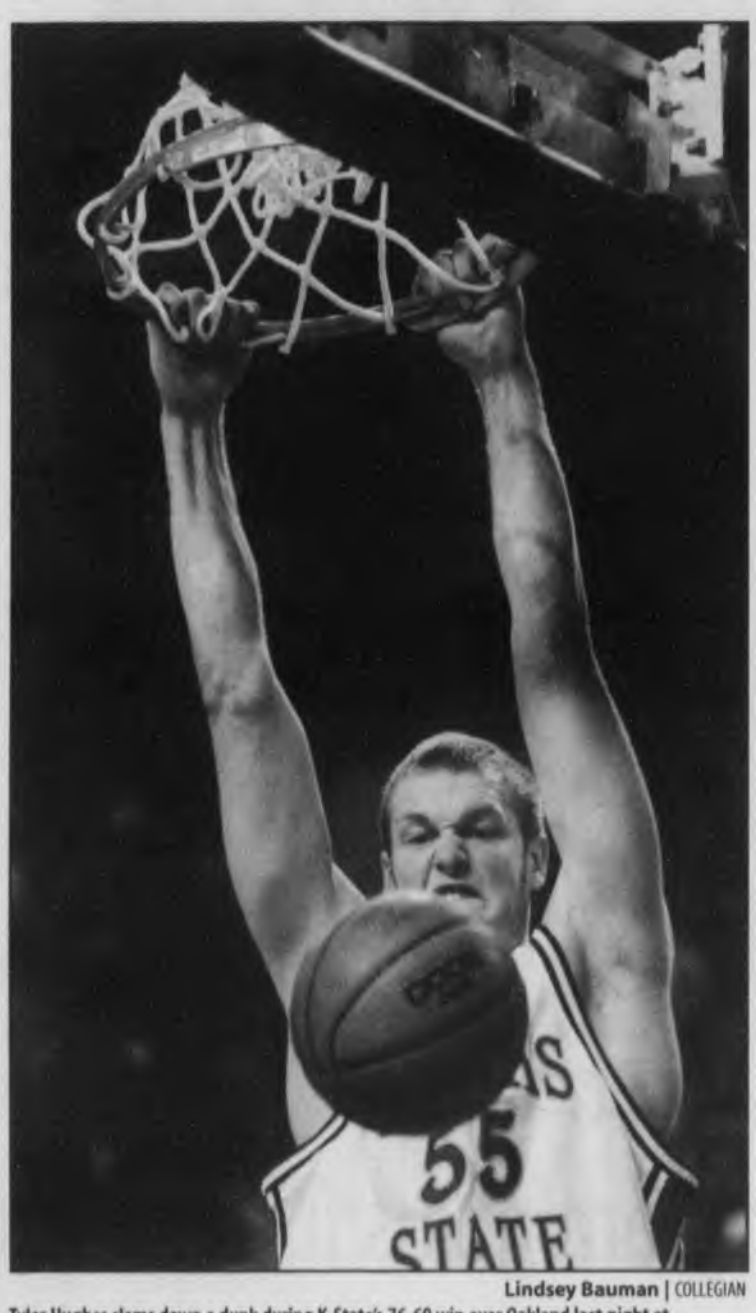
"It was a little frustrating," said freshman point guard Clent Stewart of Oakland's ability to initially hold off the Wildcats. "We kept cutting it down, and they kept getting little 5-6 point runs. But we knew if we just kept in there and kept playing hard, we had the home-court advantage, we could get the crowd pumped up and we'd come out with the win."

Oakland senior guard Rawle Marshall kept things interesting down the stretch with two 3-pointers inside a minute left. However, the Wildcats responded by going 7-of-8 from the free-throw line with less than a minute remaining to seal the win.

For the third time this season, K-State trailed at the half due to the 3-point shooting of the Grizzlies. Oakland connected on seven 3-pointers in the first half, as senior guard Rawle Marshall and sophomore guard Kris Krzyminski combined for 23 points.

Martin said the team was surprised by Oakland's shooting but knew it would not last.

"They made some shots we didn't think they were going to make," Martin said. "We knew they weren't going to be making them all night. We just had to pick up our defense a little bit more, get on them a little bit more, get a hand in their face and contest their shots."



Switching to a zone defense, K-State clamped down on the Oakland perimeter in the second half. The Grizzlies were just 2-of-14 from behind the arc, and Marshall and Krzyminski were held to a combined 12 points after the break.

Wooldridge said the zone and the Wildcats' defensive intensity helped turn the game.

"Their shooting dried up somewhat, and we were able to capitalize on that," Wooldridge said. "I thought we played well in the second half. The zone was a part of that, but I think the way we played it was just as important."

K-State hits the road for the first time this season to play Wyoming (4-1) at 9 p.m Saturday. Though the Wildcats are undefeated thus far this season, Hayden said it's too soon to label this team as it prepares for the Cowboys.

"I wouldn't put 'good' in the same sentence with our team," Hayden said. "It's still too early. A lot of things can go wrong from here."

Massey leads Wildcats to comeback win, ties record

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey brought his 'A' game on Monday in K-State's come-from-behind, 76-69 victory over Oakland at Bramlage Coliseum.

The 6-foot-7 Detroit, Mich., native tied a career-high with 24 points and also registered a career-high 15 rebounds, turning in his second double-double of the season.

"He played one good game for us," freshman point guard Clent Stewart said. "It was probably the best game I've seen him play, and we definitely need that out of him."

In the first half, Massey led the team, scoring 14 points on 6-of-10 shooting from the field and pulling in eight rebounds, helping the Wildcats cut a 15-point Oakland lead to 43-36 at the break.

When asked about carrying the Wildcats in the first half, Massey said he knows this is his team, and he has to do what he can to help the team win.

"I feel like I'm always carrying the team," Massey said. "You can't make a home-run play and come back and win with one play, so we just had to lock down and do better and get back into the game."

In the second half, Massey shot only 3-of-6 from the floor, but was 4-of-5 from the free-throw line, grabbing seven rebounds and giving the Wildcats their first lead of the game on a fast-break dunk with just more than four minutes left to play.

Junior forward Marques Hayden said Massey's performance against Oakland is what the team expects out of him.

"It's not if he is, it's how much he is, day in and day out," Hayden said. "He did what he supposed to do."

For the game, Massey was 9-of-16 (56.3 percent) from the floor, which marked a season high, and it was the 12th time in his career he scored 20 points or more.

Coach Jim Wooldridge said Massey played well, but there is still room for improvement.

"He was geared up tonight, and he made a big impact on the game," Wooldridge said. "We always challenge him to bring his 'A' game, so to speak. He's a great kid, he wants to do well, he wants his team to do well, but I think we are still educating him."

Madden needs to step up for Cats after Wecker's injury

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Coach Bill Snyder should send Coach Deb Patterson a thank you card.

His program is no longer the top story at K-State after he rescinded the scholarship offer to Pasadena City College linebacker Marcus Raines, who is still suffering the consequences of a 2000 involuntary manslaughter charge.

With their upset loss to Liberty, the K-State women's basketball team relieved Snyder of the top headline of the weekend.

Snyder pulled the scholarship Friday night, without a definite reason but the women's basketball team still turned out to be the biggest story this weekend.

In the last six years, K-State has won the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic. It is a tournament set up for them to win on their home court, in front of their fans and against inferior opponents.

Except this year.

After preseason first-team All-American Kendra Wecker left the game injured early in the first half of the Wildcats' first round win over New Hampshire at Bramlage Coliseum, K-State struggled.

With Wecker on the court, the Wildcats led 14-0. After she was injured, K-State outscored New Hampshire 31-28 heading into halftime.

Without Wecker, the Wildcats are an average team lacking inside presence that can open up the outside for Laurie Koehn and limits the creativity and passing ability of Megan Mahoney and slashing ability of Claire Coggins.

Someone not named Koehn, Mahoney or Coggins needs to step up.

The player to do that is Brie Madden.

While she will not average the 20.6 points per game Wecker does, Madden needs to score more than the six points and play more than the 22 minutes she did against the Lady Flames.

Madden needs to be an option in the offense.

In the Wildcats' win over Pepperdine earlier this season, Madden had a career-high 18 points.

Why?

Because she called for the ball, flashed to the high post and made herself a triple-threat when she had the ball.

Fast forward to this Saturday's loss to Liberty.

Madden played only seven minutes in the first half and had two shot attempts. The first one clanked off the backboard but was rebounded by Jessica McFarland and put back in for the first points of the game. Madden finished with 10 shots in the game but only six points and two free throw attempts.

"No, I'm not a point guard. I'm not going to control the offense," Madden said after the game. "I'm not going to try to score 25 points like Kendra. That's not what I'm going to try to do."

Madden needs to realize that when K-State plays its best basketball, the Wildcats are not settling for the 3-point shot as they did in their loss on Saturday, but the offense flows from the inside out.

Madden needs to play the center spot like McFarland did in her place.

McFarland pulled the 6-foot-8 Katie Feenstra away from the basket numerous times and made herself a presence at the high post. She also connected on a back-door pass to Chelsea Domenico and set-up the screen that freed up Koehn for the 3-pointer that briefly tied the game at 21.

Madden is not Wecker, but in order for the Wildcats to keep their heads above water while Wecker is on the bench, Madden needs to be an option for K-State, not just a defender and rebounder.

The "Cats for Cans" program had one of its most success efforts ever, as the K-State Student-Athlete Advisory Committee collected more than 7,500 pounds of food and $4,000 in donations on Oct. 30.

The $4,000 collected before the football game against Texas Tech set a record and doubled last year's amount of $2,000. However, the amount of food collected was down 500 pounds from last year.

PGA | Tiger's run is over; Singh wins top PGA honor

Vijay Singh won the PGA Tour player of the year award Monday for the first time, ending Tiger Woods' five-year hold on the honor with a season that left no debate about who was No. 1 in golf.

Singh

Singh captured the PGA Championship among his nine victories and became the first player to surpass $10 million in one season. No one else won more than three times, and his earnings were nearly twice as much as Ernie Els'.

Singh earlier won the PGA of America player of the year award, which is determined by points. He also captured his first Vardon Trophy for having the lowest scoring average, as well as his second straight money title.

Stefani fails in solo debut

"Love. Angel. Music. Baby."

Album review by Matt Groneman

In "Hollaback Girl," a tolerable track on "Love Angel Music Baby," Gwen Stefani says "the sh is bananas, B-A-N-A-N-A-S."

Since Stefani is the "sh," it explains this album: She has gone bananas.

This album is full of girl power faux pas and reeks of Uber-materialism.

The lead-off single, "What You Waiting For?," tells a girl to have self-esteem because of her "million-dollar contract." But because the girl is cautious, she is called a "stupid ho" repeatedly.

The Dr. Dre produced "(If I Was A) Rich Girl" has about as much authenticity as J-Lo's "Jenny From the Block." The reason Stefani isn't rich is because she doesn't "have all the money in the world."

Stefani claims at one point that being a rich girl means rich men wouldn't impress her, but she can't be with a poor guy until she is rich. Can someone say hypocrite?

The album's worst sin, however, comes with the song "Harajuku Girls." This song is a celebration of the fashions of girls in Harajuku, a popular shopping area and teen hangout in Tokyo, Japan, according to www.wikipedia.com.

Stefani is so obsessed with Harajuku's fashions that she mentions them in three songs. The fashion in Harajuku, known as the goth lolita look, consists of young women dressing like Victorian-era porcelain dolls, according to Wikipedia.

These dolls have been mass-produced and have continually reinforced stereotypes about Japanese culture.

What makes the song really bad, however, is that Stefani has backup singers chirping along in Japanese. Although the lyric book features Japanese figures, a step in the right direction, the style they

The crowd waited anxiously at Rusty's.

They were waiting for the long-awaited return of Ten til Blue on Nov. 5, a Manhattan band that had taken a bit of a hiatus. They were eager for the band's return and to hear their new material, as well as the already popular old.

As the band began to play amidst the cheers of their fans, it became clear that taking time off hasn't hurt the band, only helped it.

"I want something different, I want something different for me..." their first new song goes.

It becomes clear the crowd is in for something different as well.

The sound of Ten til Blue is the same, yet not. The guitar riffs are harder, the beats are harder. But lead singer Dave Oakleaf's voice still resonates smoothly over the instrumentals, blending it all together. It is something different, and it's something that works.

Part of the new sound is the result of the addition of a new member, guitar player Andrew Lonard. The decision to add another band member was part of the band's effort to make their routines less routine.

"It was kind of like we'd been all playing together for two years, it was the same routine in practice and our shows," lead guitar player Grant Alexander said. "Adding Andrew added a whole new dimension to the band. It really pushed us out of our rut and into our own direction."

Drummer Dustin Keith agreed and said with another member, the band can now experiment and play around with their music more.

"I think the difference between the songs before and the songs now, the songs before had to rely heavily on driving rhythm and riff-based music," Keith said. "There's more room to add melodies and little nuances."

Dave Owens, bass player, said this has given their songs more life.

"I think a lot of our new music has a lot of energy coming out of it," Owens, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said.

Fans of Ten til Blue can expect to keep hearing new music at their shows. The band has written four new songs and has as many more in the works. The band says they are going away from their cover band days, no longer playing shows featuring other bands' music.

"We're going out of our cover band era," Oakleaf, senior in journalism and mass communications, said. "We want to go out and put an hour and half show of our music, our talent."

With Keith and Lonard already graduated, and the rest graduating in May, some fans may be wondering what the future of Ten til Blue

Artists define 'cathedral'

Albums showcase spirituality, rock flavor

" Cathedral"

Album reviews by Mark Sibilla

When one thinks of a cathedral, a grand, expansive building comes to mind, often bringing an air of authority with it.

Two albums released by two different bands with two different styles perfectly adhere to the definition of the word through their creative and powerful music.

The first is the Castanets' debut, "Cathedral," which brings about a quiet, spiritual album examining relationships with people and God.

The second is the Comets On Fire's third album, "Blue Cathedral," brings a grandiose, powerful blast of neo-psychedelic rock.

The Castanet's sound is difficult to describe. It is a mixture of country, experimental rock, psychedelic folk and swampy blues.

Front man Raymond Raposa sings in a hushed, isolated tenor in front of holds. The band plans on staying together, but not in Manhattan. The band has plans to relocate to Kansas City.

"After graduation, we all hope to be based out of Kansas City," Alexander said.

"Nothing against Manhattan, we just need something a little larger."

Though Kansas City holds the prospects of bigger and better things, there is one thing the band will miss about Manhattan: their fans.

Alexander, fifth year in architecture, said coming back to the fans and seeing how their fans have stuck around showed the band what loyal fans they will be leaving at K-State.

"We saw that everybody was still sticking with us," Alexander said, "and that was the best feeling in the world."

sing in is an exaggeration of stereotypical Asian accents.

The danger of this is that it celebrates the women not for their beauty, but because they are exotic and different. Stefani seems to see beauty only through difference rather than celebrating Japanese culture because it itself is beautiful.

A couple songs are interesting, such as "Bubble Pop Electric" and "Hollaback Girl." But the album's one gem, which gives it an extra half star, comes in the form of the Andre 3000, duet "Long Way To Go."

This song is about interracial dating and the pain Andre 3000 and Gwen Stefani feel when they go on a date together and get stared at.

"We've got a long way to go," sings Andre.

Yes, we do, and that "we" includes Stefani.

REVIEW | Pair of emotional, powerful albums please the ears with use of spacious melodies

instrumentation that sounds like it was recorded rooms away.

The spaciousness of the music adds a new dimension to the sound.

The opener, "Cathedral 2 (Your Feet On the Floor Sounding Like the Rain)," begins with a smoky saxophone solo backed by a funeral march-like percussion rhythm with an ominous organ and gently strummed guitar.

Raposa sings, "It's alright to want more than this/It's alright to want more," in such a depressive, isolated manner that even Elizabeth Janes' beautiful backing vocals do little to bring the mood up.

Throughout the album, Raposa addresses his own personal concerns with himself, his family and God.

Many of the songs can be interpreted in a spiritual sense, but it is when Raposa directly addresses God ("The Smallest Bones," "We Are the Wreckage") that the album becomes transcendental.

Even the album's rockers, such as "Industry and Snow," sound like Raposa is fully searching for a way out of his grief-filled situation.

"Cathedral" is a beautiful album that complements a brisk autumn day of staying inside and meditating on life.

On the other spectrum of music sits the Comets On Fire's "Blue Cathedral," which resurrects psych-rock from its grave harkening back to bands such as MC5, Led Zeppelin and Hawkwind.

All of the Comet's elements come together for this brilliant album.

'Cathedral' is a beautiful album that complements a brisk autumn day of staying inside and meditating on life.

This album is as powerful as the Castanet's album, but in a different manner.

The music bludgeons the listener with a double guitar attack, stadium-sized drumming and a hypnotic echoplex that creates a sound that explodes out of the speaker.

The opener, "The Bee and the Cracking Egg," creates a hypnotic groove on drum and bass with a powerful riff and rhythm that is laid over the top.

"Pussy Foot the Duke," is a wonderful instrumental number that softens the dynamics before "Whiskey River" appears to grab hold of the listener once more with a powerful sonic assault.

The track has an underlying melody kept throughout the song until an extended coda rips it apart and meshes it together once more.

The Comets On Fire bring a commanding album that gives hope to a new area of psychadelica.

Both the Castanets and the Comets On Fire bring excellent albums of emotionally wrenching music that is subdued and thunderous respectively.

Ohio certifies Bush as the winner by nearly 119,000

Kerry team says all votes must be counted

By Andrew Welsh-Huggins
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio – This battleground state on Monday certified President Bush's 119,000-vote victory over John Kerry, even as the Kerry campaign and third-party candidates prepared to demand a statewide recount.

The president won Ohio with 2.86 million votes, or 51 percent, to Kerry's 2.74 million votes, or 49 percent.

The 118,775-vote lead was closer than the unofficial election night margin of 136,000, but not enough to trigger a mandatory recount. Absentee ballots and provisional votes counted after election night made most of the difference.

"This was an election where you have some glitches, but none of these glitches were of a conspiratorial nature, and none of them would overturn or change the election results," said Secretary of State Kenneth Blackwell, a Republican who, as the state's chief election official, certified the results.

The presidential election hung on Ohio, prized for its 20 electoral votes. Not until the morning after the election did Kerry finally concede – realizing there were not enough provisional ballots to erase Bush's lead.

But critics have cited numerous Election Day problems, from long lines, a shortage of voting machines in predominantly minority neighborhoods and suspicious vote totals for candidates in scattered precincts.

The Kerry campaign last week joined the presidential candidates for the Green and Libertarian parties who are asking for a recount. The candidates, who received less than 0.5 percent of the Ohio vote, planned to file their requests Tuesday. The Kerry camp is not disputing the outcome of the race, but wants to ensure that every vote is counted.

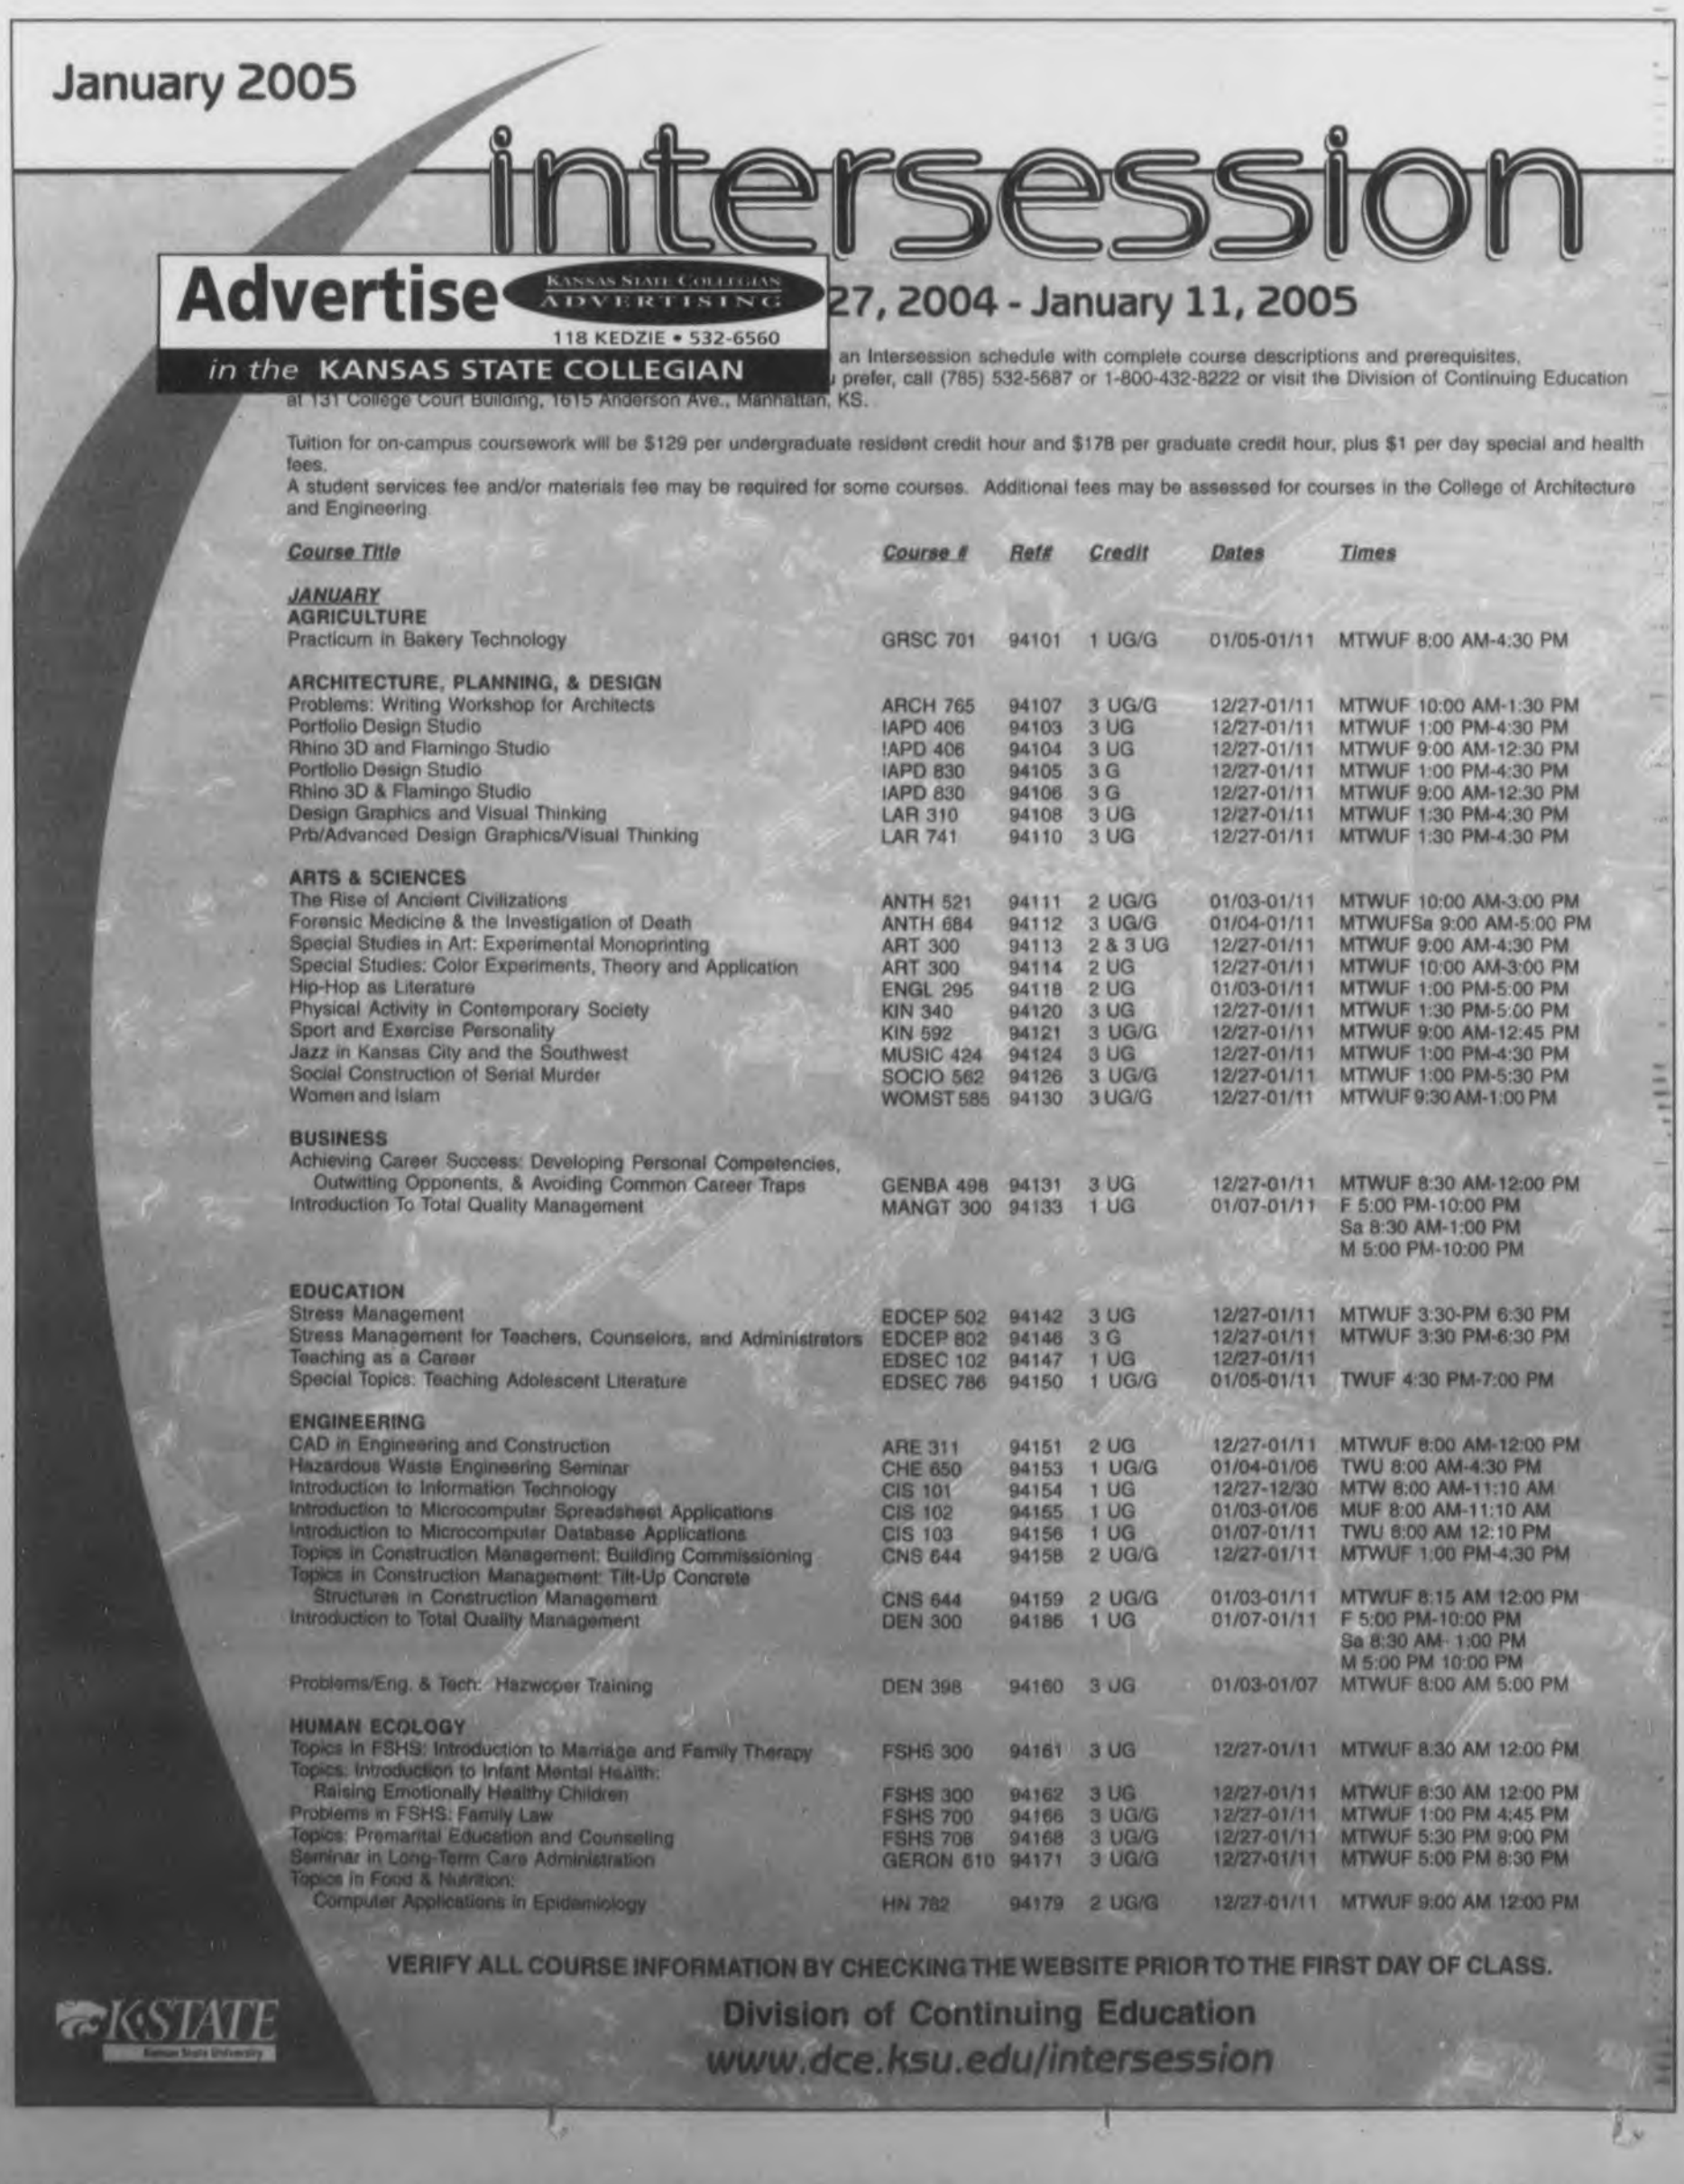
A ruling by a federal judge in Columbus on Friday rejected one county's attempt to stop a recount, avoiding a legal precedent that could have stopped other recounts. Green and Libertarian party candidates already have raised the required $113,600 for the recounts.

Republicans said conducting a recount is pointless.

"If there's a recount, there's going to be two losers – John Kerry and the Ohio taxpayer," said Mark Weaver, a lawyer representing the Ohio Republican Party. "It's going to cost more than $1.5 million to find out what we already know."

The amount the independent candidates have raised is based on state law calculating the cost of a recount to be $10 a precinct, but Blackwell's office has said a more realistic price tag is $1.5 million.

About 20 people protested outside Blackwell's office Monday, demanding Blackwell postpone the Dec. 13 electoral college vote in Ohio until the recount is finished. Blackwell said the vote will take place.



And in San Francisco, about 150 people rallied outside the office of U.S. Rep. Nancy Pelosi, the House minority leader, to protest voting irregularities, particularly those in Ohio.

Keith Cunningham, vice president of the state election boards association, bristled at suggestions that the election was plagued by fraud or widespread error.

"To actually assert that elections officials in Ohio have intentionally done something is beyond insulting," he said. "I know election officials all over the state – it's just fantasy run wild."

The Democratic Party also said Monday it will examine reports of voting problems in Ohio.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Mitch Gleaves, 5, runs up to greet Santa on Monday afternoon at Manhattan Town Center. Children can tell Santa what they want for Christmas and also get their photo taken with him.

SANTA | Life, legacy of Santa do not end at Christmas

He appears at family functions and works 15 parties each Christmas season. On Christmas Eve, he works at the mall until 3 p.m., hands out candy canes at the hospitals and then appears at friends' houses to deliver good cheer.

And the tradition goes on all year long.

"Kids recognize me in the summertime and want to talk to me," he said. "I take it seriously. I don't want to give a bad impression of Santa so I keep that attitude all year long."

His funniest gift requests this year have been purple long johns and an owl.

Nicole Reynolds, 3, asked Santa Monday afternoon for a vacuum and microwave to make cookies.

"She wants to help mom around the house," Brandi, Nicole's mother, said.

Mitch Gleaves, 5, comes to see Santa several times a week and always ask for a rocket ship and two airplanes.

"He told me everything," Mitch said.

The jolly laugh comes easily, and Santa knows how to answer the tough questions about milk, cookies and reindeer.

"I take it really seriously," Santa said. "I try not to joke around, and I try to keep what I remember from the picture of Santa I always had in my mind."

After handing out a reindeer hat, Santa leaves children with the same message.

"Be good," he said, "and Merry Christmas."

SAUDI | Attackers threaten 18 people at gunpoint

since May and seemed a clear sign that the Saudi government's crackdown on al-Qaeda linked extremists has not yet entirely succeeded.

President Bush said the attack showed "terrorists" are trying to intimidate Americans and force the United States to withdraw from Saudi Arabia and Iraq.

"They want us to grow timid and weary in the face of their willingness to kill randomly, kill innocent people," Bush said at the White House after a meeting with interim Iraqi President Ghazi al-Yawer. "That's why these elections in Iraq are very important."

Bush also thanked Saudi Arabia for quelling the attack and said more would be learned about who was behind it.

The Saudi Cabinet, following a session led by Crown Prince Abdullah, condemned the attack and reaffirmed "the Saudi kingdom's determination to fight terrorism in all its aspects and to hunt down perpetrators."

The attack prompted the U.S. Embassy in Riyadh to urge thousands of Americans in the country to "exercise utmost security precautions." Saudi officials blamed the attack on a "deviant" group – their way of identifying al-Qaeda extremists.

The attackers sneaked behind an embassy car that was entering the consulate through the gate, then lobbed hand grenades at guards to take control of the area, al-Turki told the AP.

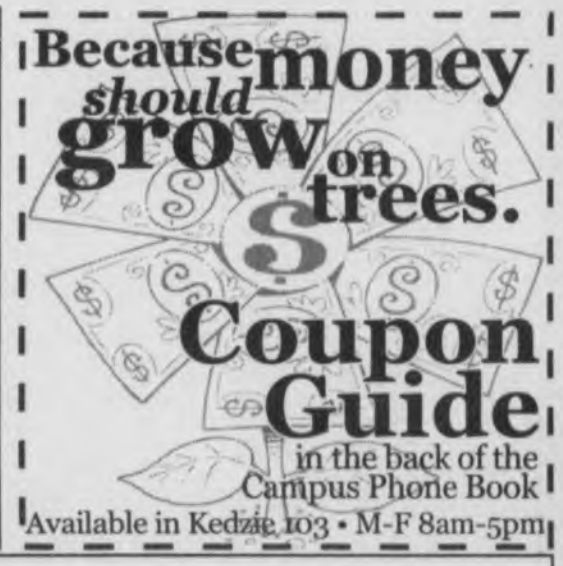
He said the attackers also used grenades designed to create fires and send up heavy smoke. Plumes of black smoke could be seen rising in the air shortly after the attack.

After getting inside the compound's outer security wall, the attackers seized about 18 people at gunpoint, said a senior Saudi official in Washington, who spoke on condition of anonymity. Those held were mostly either in the area – which is like a courtyard – applying for visas, or employees who worked there, the official said.

The attackers never made it inside the consulate's buildings.

Saudi security forces, including snipers, could be seen on the rooftops around the consulate compound, and helicopters hovered overhead.

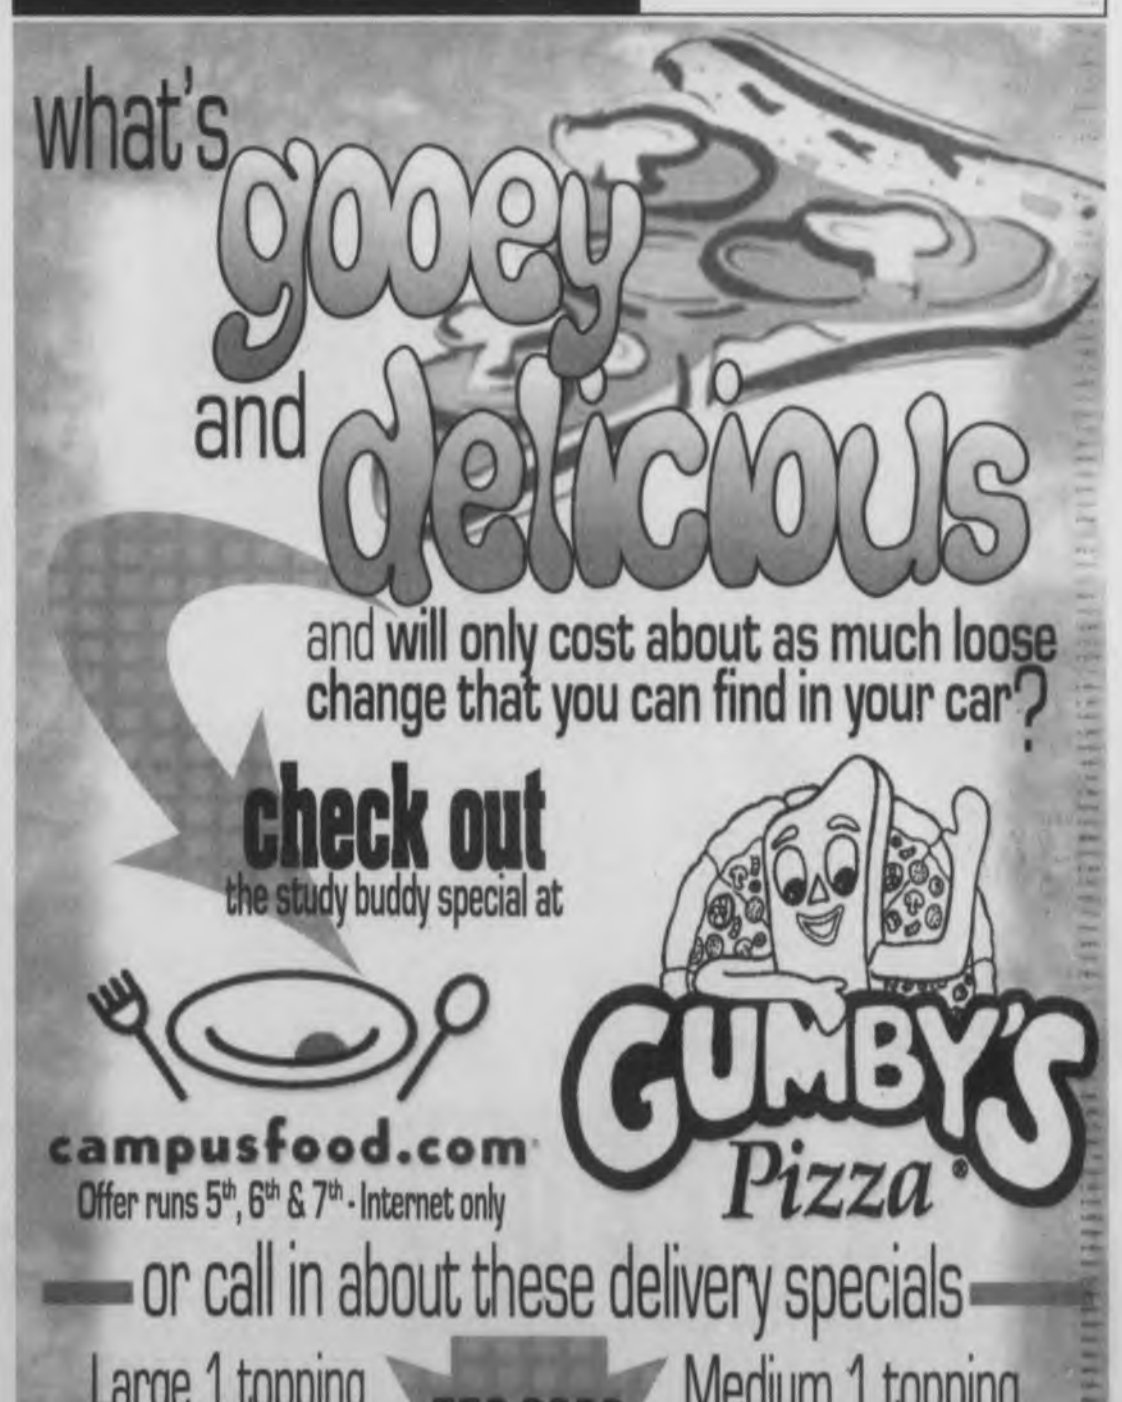
At one point, the attackers called a local police station to report they had hostages and would begin killing them unless Saudi security forces backed away from the compound, according to the Saudi official in Washington. As the call was ending, Saudi security forces stormed the area and fought a short gunbattle, the official said.



Al-Turki denied anyone was held hostage, but said the attackers did hurt those they came across in the courtyard area.

In Riyadh, U.S. Embassy spokeswoman Carol Kalin said four of the five employees killed held administrative jobs, and one was a private contract guard on the consulate's payroll. Four other embassy workers – all hired locally – were hospitalized, Kalin said.

She said all American employees were safe and none had been held at gunpoint.



Kalin said it was unclear if any of the U.S. Marine guards inside the consulate were involved in the gunbattle.

Hearings begin for Murray case

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Prosecutors began presenting evidence at a preliminary hearing Monday against a K-State English professor for the murder of his ex-wife.

Thomas Murray, 48, is charged with murdering Carmin Ross, 40, on Nov. 13, 2003, in her Lawrence home.

Ross was an attorney, a conflict mediator and was the director of employee relations at K-State until 1997.

Douglas County Sheriff's deputies found Ross dead in her home Nov. 14, 2003. An autopsy report released in Oct. 2004 revealed Ross was stabbed 17 times and slashed 11 times.

Ross and Murray divorced in June 2003 and had a joint custody arrangement for their 5-year-old daughter, Ciara Ross-Murray.

According to the Associated Press, Ross's fiancé, Larry Lima, testified Monday that he and Ross had plans to be married in November 2003. He said Murray was told about their marriage plans by Ross. She also told Murray she would be moving to California after

Tipster gives $40,000 to foundation

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – An anonymous tipster who could have received a $40,000 cash reward for information that led to an arrest in a high-profile murder case has turned it down, directing that the money go instead to an educational fund established in the victim's name.

Ali Kemp, a 19-year-old K-State student, was strangled two years ago in June while working at a neighborhood swimming pool in Leawood, Kan.

The widely publicized case produced thousands of leads and tips that failed to pan out. Then last month, former Kansas City area resident Benjamin Appleby was arrested in Bantam, Conn., where he was living under another name. Leawood police said anonymous tips provided information crucial to finding and Positioned right next to a long stretch of runway and two plane hangars is the hangar for the aviation maintenance students.

The 75-student program gives students the opportunity to learn hands on about maintaining and repairing a fleet of planes.

The College of Technology and Aviation offers three different degrees in the maintenance field: an airframe and powerplant certificate program, the aviation maintenance associate's degree and the aviation maintenance Bachelor's degree.

To obtain a two-year associate's degree in aviation maintenance, students in the program must accumulate a total of 1,900 hours of contact time in classes and working on the fleet of airplanes.

Aircrafts sit in a hangar on the K-State-Salina campus waiting to be repaired. The Salina campus has two hangars — one for repairs and the other with working planes in it.

"In any other degree, you have to have 1,900-2,000 hours in four years," Andrew Smith, aviation maintenance department head, said. "The students who continue on for the Bachelor's degree have all of those undergraduate classes to take as well. It is a challenging program, and it is another 1,900 to 2,000 hours."

What sets the aviation maintenance students apart from the other students is the amount of time they spend in the hangar working on planes.

"Its just like a regular job schedule," Bert Gardner, sophomore in aviation maintenance, said. "It is just like a regular job, but we are actually in class."

Much of K-State Salina's attraction is the location and reputation of the college, Smith said.

"Ours is that we have great facilities, and good equipment," he said. "We're located at a retired Air Force base. The Salina airport is just outstanding. Salina is known for aircraft production and maintenance."

It is rare for a flight school to have such immediate access to runways and planes, however, the fact that Salina resides on a former Air Force base means that the Report: Campus maintenance lacks funds

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Money is always an issue when keeping up with maintenance needs at K-State.

There is more than $209 million worth of maintenance-need back-up at K-State, according to a report by the Kansas Board of Regents.

Ed Heptig, director of maintenance for the Division of Facilities, said there is always something that needs to be done, but the money doesn't stretch far enough.

"There's just not enough funding," he said. "The funding is used up before we get everything done every year."

Did you know?

Campus maintenance

- new roofs
- new windows
- updated electrical system
- replace water lines
- replace sewer lines
- replace steam lines
- heating and cooling updates

The problem is not just at K-State, though. At the six regent schools there is about $584 million worth of back-up in maintenance needs, according to the Board of Regents' report. The Board of Regents is asking $74 million annually from the state until the problem is fixed.

Funding for maintenance comes from the state repair and replacement fund, Heptig said.

There are many buildings at K-State that need repairs, especially older buildings built in the late 1800s and early 1900s, he said.

"It varies from building to building how much repairs are needed," Heptig said.

The repairs needed are also of a variety, he said. There are about 20 roofs that need to be replaced.

Students try for dreidel record

Illustration by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. – Mere seconds separated victory from defeat for 541 members of the Bloomington, Ind., community, who all lent a hand Sunday afternoon at the Indiana University Fieldhouse in an attempt to break the Guinness Book of World Records record for the most dreidels spun in unison.

Despite the effort by the Bloomington community, IU failed to meet all of the requirements to officially break the record.

The rules stipulate each person can only spin one dreidel. In addition, the event must take place specifically to break the record and all dreidels must spin in unison for 10 seconds or longer. IU met all but the last of these requirements.

COLORADO NIXES RETAKES

BOULDER, Colo. – CU-Boulder students want to keep a pilot course-forgiveness program despite the Boulder Faculty Association's 15-to-9 vote last Thursday night to abandon the program.

The course-forgiveness program began in 2001 as a pilot program and is now under review. It allows CU undergraduate students to retake a class if they make a D+ or below and allows graduate students to retake a class if they make a C- or below. When students retake a course the original grade is replaced by the second grade. It is also removed from the student's credit hours and grade point average, but the first attempt at the course remains on the official transcript.

Students are allowed to use the course-forgiveness option for up to 10 credit hours and only twice during their academic careers.

SORORITY BREAK-IN

ANN ARBOR, Mich. – In what some University of Michigan sorority members are calling the damaging escalation of a friendly tradition, nine members of Theta Chi fraternity were arrested early Saturday morning after police said they gained illegal entry into the Delta Delta Delta sorority house. The sorority will press charges, which could result in felony punishments.

The men reportedly climbed up a fire escape and entered through the bathroom window of the sorority house, Ann Arbor Police said. Among other items, police said they stole two composite pictures, which consist of photos of every member of the fraternity or sorority and are often displayed in greek houses.

Police said they found three men inside a van and two on the roof of the house and two others later came out of the house. While police were questioning the group, two additional men came out of the house and fled on foot. Police ran after the two and caught them, Ouellette said.

BAR TRICK GONE BAD

IOWA CITY, Iowa – Former University of Iowa student Deanine Busche will soon learn if she will collect any money from a downtown bar whose manager poured alcohol on dying flames during a fiery bar stunt. Lawyers for the former student claim that action ignited a fireball that burned 13 percent of Busche's body.

Busche suffered burns to her face, neck, chest, arms, and left hand, a ligament tear in her right shoulder, and a broken nose, causing permanent scarring and disfigurement, according to pretrial records.

Winter Potter's Guild sale ends today in Union

By Heather Bunch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pick a pot, any pot.

The Potter's Guild is ending their December sale today.

The sale has been going since Monday on the first floor of the K-State Student Union.

"I'm just looking for beautiful things," Dick Hoag, a shopper at the sale, said.

Allison Ezell, senior in graphics design and a member of the Potters' Guild, said the pottery makes great gifts.

"We have everything for a friend or for a parent. You can get just about anything that you want, from cups to vases, and there are sculptural pieces, pitchers and we have some very beautiful platters. You can also find pieces in just about any kind of price range, from $5 to $50," she said.

Todd Matteson, graduate student in art, said this is one of three sales the Potters' Guild holds each year, the others being in October and May.

"We have these sales to support our buying of equipment and sending our students to national conferences," Matteson said.

The National Council of Education Ceramics Association conference, which will be held this year in Baltimore, Md., is something the students look forward to attending.

Matteson said the sale helps raise the funds necessary to assist in paying for hotel rooms and travel accommodations.

"For four days in March, we all get to go to Baltimore. It's a huge event, probably the biggest of the year. A lot of very famous ceramicists will meet and we will get to see their work, and attend their workshops," Ezell said. "I've never been, but I'm really looking forward to going this year."

All the pieces for sale are made by students in classes or as outside independent work.

"The students receive their grade and pick the ones that they would like to keep, and the ceramics department and potters guild sells pieces that we like," Matteson said. "Seventy percent of the money goes to the students and thirty percent goes back to the department. The students do get the majority of it back though because it is their art work, and their clay."

Rachel Griess, senior in biology, buys graduation presents for her friends at the sale.

"I've come almost every time they have a sale because I really love their work. Usually, I wait until right before Christmas before I buy anything, though."

Hoag said he was impressed with the offerings of the sale.

"[The price] is very inexpensive for the quality of the work," Hoag said. "The pieces of course change from year to year, but they always have exceptional work."

Annan rejects calls to resign post

By Edith M. Lederer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS – Secretary-General Kofi Annan rejected calls for his resignation from several U.S. lawmakers, saying Tuesday he will "carry on" at the helm of the United Nations for the next two years.

Five Republican members of the House of Representatives on Monday backed a GOP senator's call for Annan to resign amid allegations of corruption in the U.N. oil-for-food program.

But outside the United States, there is no clamor for the secretary-general to step down, and he has picked up support from many of the 191 U.N. member states.

Annan said he plans to concentrate on reform of the United Nations in the last two years of his term, a process that began last week with the release of a report by a high-level panel that analyzed global threats in the 21st century and made 101 recommendations on how to tackle them.

"I have quite a lot of work to do and I'm carrying on with my work," Annan said.

TO THE POINT

Facilities work requires more funding

A recent report by the Kansas Board of Regents details the hundreds of millions of dollars of backed-up maintenance work need at K-State.

While the priorities of the university should rest with providing quality programs and faculty to best educate K-State students, the extreme nature of the work required should raise eyebrows and prompt funding changes for years to come.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

While students should not expect sparkling new facilities, the K-State community should re-prioritize an adequate amount of allocatable funds to address these deficiencies before the individual problems worsen.

Issues such as old roofing lend themselves to causing further damage if not addressed. As the region experiences precipitation and other meteorological phenomena, roofing problems threaten to cause property damage within the buildings in need of roofing repairs.

As with many problems, failure to address them will result only in greater problems. With the degree of work required, as detailed in the Board of Regents report, it would be foolish for the university to allow these problems to linger and compound with time.

Thanks for the ride

Semester provides many vivid memories for columnist

LOGAN ADAMS

It's funny how a college semester gets itself over with. High school would drag on forever and ever. The columns I published these 16 weeks are all ones that I'm very proud of.

Two things surprised me deeply this semester. The first being that no one was angry when I wrote a column against hate crime legislation. No angry letters, no Fourum calls, nothing even disagreeing with me. I did get one piece of fan mail from a friend, but that's it.

The other was that so many got angry when I wrote a column against minimum wage. I should've seen that one coming – you are college students, after all? I still support the free market, but after all that I'm more than willing to compromise on the issue.

Whatever the case, I gave a big amount of free publicity to people in Riley County wanting a "living wage." You're welcome.

The first half of this semester was some of the best fun I've ever had, and as you all know, the second half was anything but that. I won't dive into the details, they've been seen again and again by everyone.

What I do know is that I'm glad to have made it thus far, and that the end is so close. It wasn't easy getting here.

It was the recommendations of a few dear colleagues and friends, along with an old letter Barbara Meyer wrote, that convinced me to apply to be the Opinion Editor for the remainder of the year. I knew I had to do it; she had told me about so many of her plans and it was up to me to make them happen.

To give credit where it is due, it was her idea that I stay up late with the news staff on election night and write my column once the election had been won or lost. I remember how well-received my conversion to Kerry-supporting went over, but I'm proud of my decision.

Above all, Barbara wanted the Opinion Page to print the very best work of each of the writers, and I did my best to make that happen. It wasn't as good as she would have made it, but that's the reality of it all. She simply was better than me, a blind man could see that.

It's been two months now since I last saw Barbara Meyer, and these undoubtedly have been the worst two months of my life so far. Between the nightmares I face in my sleep and the nightmares I face while awake, I've found it difficult to hold on to reality, but I'm still here.

Finally, I wish to share my favorite memory from this whole semester.

It was the time I was walking south between Seaton and Holtz halls months ago this semester on a day on which my column had printed. It was one that I knew would be unpopular, and I was feeling nervous that an angry mob bearing torches and pitchforks would appear at any moment to rip me to pieces.

You'd love to see that, admit it. Hell, I kind of would myself.

I was trudging along, my head hanging low, when suddenly a voice burst out from the quiet.

"Logan Adams, you wrote the worst column ever and I hate you!"

Walking the other way, with the most devious grin on the face of the earth, was you-guessed-who.

I love you, Barb.

Logan will not be here in the spring and will miss almost everybody, maybe even Parking Services. You can e-mail him at ladams@ksu.edu.

GRANT REICHERT

Grant Reichert explains why America is simply better.

Marijuana laws should aid those in pain

SHANNA HAJEK

I've never smoked marijuana. Call me a goody two-shoes if you want, but it's just never interested me. I've seen people high on it and it seems to render them quite lazy and worthless in a work setting.

Though I do not condone the use of marijuana under regular circumstances, there are certain circumstances in which I support it. There are many people out there, in unbelievable, debilitating pain whose only relief is to get high.

I have seen many mock-ups of the use of medicinal marijuana, the most memorable being in an episode of "The Simpsons." Homer is attacked by a flock (or "murder") of crows, and his doctor gives him a prescription of marijuana to ease the pain of his nearly pecked-out eyes. Hilarity ensues, as you can easily imagine.

But there are a lot of situations in which the need for medicinal marijuana isn't so humorous.

There are people out there suffering, whose biggest struggle everyday is usually getting out of bed. They are cancer patients, AIDS patients, people with incurable diseases and inoperable tumors. And the one thing that enables them to forget their pain is the use of marijuana.

In a study performed by the Institute of Medicine in 1999, marijuana can alleviate the nausea and vomiting suffered by chemotherapy patients and also the severe weight loss that is shown in cases of individuals with the AIDS virus. These are just a few aspects of serious illnesses that marijuana can be used to treat.

The most recent case involving medicinal marijuana was reviewed by the Supreme Court just recently on Nov. 29 in Ashcroft v. Raich.

The plaintiff in this case suffers from as many as nine different serious illnesses, none of which have responded to any other medication other than the prescription for marijuana.

The federal government is currently attempting to supercede a state's ability to make medicinal marijuana legal.

Not only is this another deliberate attempt at weakening the power of each individual state, but it is also a horrible denial of treatment for those whose daily life couldn't go on without it.

The federal government seems to be making an effort to put a stranglehold on the distribution and use of marijuana, but they're going about it the wrong way.

There seems to be an overall belief that if we stop the use of marijuana for medicinal purposes, it will stop the trafficking and use of marijuana all over the country.

I don't have to tell you that this theory is ridiculous. Anyone with a brain could realize that. If anything, prescriptions for medicinal marijuana are highly controlled and monitored by physicians. Thus far, the Supreme Court is not allowing the federal government such ridiculous amounts of power over each state. Justice Sandra Day O'Connor has had a hand in keeping them at bay.

But it looks as though the fight for the use of medicinal marijuana will be a long one.

Chances are we all know someone who has suffered from this kind of pain in their life. Whether it be from cancer, AIDS, multiple sclerosis, or some other terminal disease, we know them.

You can help fight to keep their lives as pain-free as possible if medicinal marijuana is something they'd consider as treatment.

Congratulations to the people who TPed that house on Sunset Avenue. That was the best in Manhattan history. Please post pictures on the Internet if anybody took any. Thanks.

To the girl sitting next to me in the library: it's been 20 minutes, and you're still talking on your stupid cell phone. This is a library, not a phone booth. Take it outside.

ADPi, yes, you just got destroyed with TP. Yes, it will take a long time to clean up, and yes, we are FarmHouse, and we still love you.

Beware: There are bats in Bluemont.

You should be glad the Democrats are still here. They're the only ones keeping Bush from completely destroying your civil liberties.

If I knew that K-Staters were such babies that complained to the Fourum all the time, I would have considered going somewhere else.

Is it weird that my roommate told the girl that I'm dating that he loves her and that he can't talk to her anymore because she loves me.

I really enjoyed the Black and Gold Pageant yesterday; it was awesome. Good job to all the ladies; great job.

I'm too lazy to bake cinnamon rolls so I bought a cinnamon roll scented candle. Now my roommates wake up with false hopes.

Congratulations to LaToya Loren.

Almost kicked a gorilla in the balls last night.

Yeah, it just isn't Christmas without a bad case of herpes.

All the steam rising out of the ground on K-State makes me worry if there's volcanic activity on campus.

Hey, this is Buddy. What's your favorite color?

No way, I just saw a bat fly on the third floor of Bluemont.

There should be a new rule put in place in parking lots. If you walk to your car and open the door, then you have to leave. Your car is not a locker.

Commission approves April sales tax vote

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A sales tax initiative to support Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 will be put on the April 2005 ballot.

City Commissioners voted 3-2 Tuesday night to allow $0.25 sales tax initiative to be on the ballot.

A working committee will now be established with the school board to decide how the funds would be used and distributed. The committee will include Commissioners Bruce Snead and Ed Klimek, who voted in favor of the initiative.

Robert Seymour, associate superintendent, who presented the idea to the Commission, said the sales tax is needed because the schools need more funding.

"We feel the programs we may begin to cut will effect the quality of education," he said.

Several residents attended the meeting in support of the initiative.

Mo Hoshi, Manhattan resident, spoke in support of passing the motion. He said the quality of the schools and the community were the reasons he chose to move to Manhattan.

"I felt that this was the best place to raise a family and the best place to work," he said. "I'm here tonight not for the benefit or my children. I'm here for the sake of our community."

Hoshi, along with many others, urged the Commission to pass the motion to allow voters the chance to choose.

"You are not being asked to vote to raise taxes," he said. "You are being asked to allow the people's right to decide."

Gary Olds, Manhattan resident, was the only audience member to speak against the motion.

"I'd like to dispel the belief that quality is a function of spending," he said. "Quality is a function of commitment."

Commissioner Mark Taussig, who voted against the motion, said he did not think the city of Manhattan should be the only place the tax should be implemented, if it were to be implemented.

He said the entire school district area should contribute.

"I don't think this is fair for the community," Taussig said. "We have our own issues in terms of spending that we need to deal with."

Snead supported the motion, because high quality education is an important part of the community.

"That's what really characterizes our community," he said. "That life-long commitment to learning."

Mayor Brad Everett was the other commissioner who voted against the motion, and Commissioner Mark Hatesohl was the third vote in favor of it.

In other business

■ A motion was passed 4-0 to authorize the mayor and city clerk to execute the agreement with National Institute for Strategic Technology Acquisition, which will include the construction of a $5.6 million facility. Mayor Everett was not present for this vote.

■ A motion was passed 5-0 to authorize the City Administration to finalize and the Mayor and City Clerk to execute a finalized agreement with SSF Development, LLC, which will include new living units, public streets and water and sanitary sewer connections.

The awards Show

By Collegian Sports Staff

Regular-season play and conference championship games are completed, and with the bowl games on the horizon, the Collegian sports desk felt it was time to weigh in on a college football season full of surprises in Manhattan and beyond. Here are our picks for the best of 2004.

Big 12 Defensive Player of the Year
Derrick Johnson, senior linebacker, Texas
The man is a fumble-forcing machine, and he might be just a little crazy, which is a good combination for a linebacker — Matthew Girard

Big 12 Coach of the Year
Dan McCarney, Iowa State
Wasn't Iowa State supposed to be bad? Well, McCarney proved us wrong all year, as the Cyclones just missed playing in the Big 12 Championship game. — Matthew Girard

Big 12 Conference Surprise of the Year
Iowa State
Few could have expected the Cyclones, picked last by nearly everyone, to rise up to tie for the North Division crown, while predicted frontrunners K-State and Missouri struggled. — Josh Witt

National Surprise of the Year
Auburn
We knew they would be good, but we didn't think they would be this good. After dominating the toughest conference in the country, a Sugar Bowl victory will have the Tigers making a case for a split national championship . — Anthony Mendoza, Matthew Girard

K-State Offensive Player of the Year
Darren Sproles, senior running back
No, it wasn't the Heisman year we all hoped for, but the "Little Tank" re-wrote the entire K-State record book again and became the Big 12 career all-purpose yardage leader. — Matthew Girard

K-State Defensive Player of the Year
Brandon Archer, sophomore linebacker
He has the makings of the next great K-State linebacker. Archer stepped up for a unit that was decimated by injuries and was consistent once he entered the starting lineup. — Michael Ashford

K-State Breakout Player of the Year
Yamon Figurs, sophomore wide receiver
A favorite target of both K-State quarterbacks, Figurs is a burner who will be one of K-State's best when his career is over. — Michael Ashford

Conviction raises questions about recruitment

Snyder makes tough decision when he decided to revoke scholarship offer to potential player

MATTHEW GIRARD

It's no secret there are a number of athletes in college sports who have had past run-ins with the law. Different schools have different policies.

Some schools look the other way, some don't allow those players anywhere near the program and others are selective about which troubled athletes they allow to play.

No matter the policy, each time a player with a checkered past comes along, questions arise about how each situation should be handled.

What offenses are considered major?

How much time between the offense and the player coming to school is enough?

What does the school do if the player's troubles resurface or the player has another run-in with the law?

Last week, Coach Bill Snyder and the K-State football program raised these same questions with the announcement the school would withdraw its scholarship offer to Marcus Raines, a linebacker recruit from Pasadena (Calif.) City College.

It was well-reported, the 6-foot-3, 230-pound prospect was convicted of felony involuntary manslaughter when he was 17 years old and served one year in juvenile hall and two years in a boot camp for his involvement in the incident that killed a high school classmate.

On one hand, Snyder showed he is trying to preserve the integrity of the program and isn't going to take the chance on future incidents involving players of questionable character.

On the other hand, Snyder said in a statement that Raines – who he could not name specifically due to NCAA rules – impressed everyone associated with the program with his motivation to move forward with his life.

Not to down-play a felony involuntary manslaughter conviction, but Raines served his punishment, is likely more mature than he was at 17 and has not been in trouble with the law since the incident. Even Snyder said in his release, Raines was anxious to get away to college so he could live a better life.

I understand the reservations that come with a felony conviction of an athlete, but for all intents and purposes, it seems Raines has put the past behind him and wants the chance to play college football.

Despite K-State's reluctance to offer him a scholarship, other schools such as Florida, Washington State, Arkansas and Marshall have all shown interest in Raines.

Regardless, Snyder has made his decision, and since I'm not him, I have to trust the coach is doing what is best for the Wildcat football program.

What should happen is, the NCAA should set up a system of standards to deal with this issue. At the very least, a set of standards that define what is considered a major offense.

Standards that define if there has been enough time between the offense and playing would help schools make a decision on who would be eligible to play and let the athletes, who really are trying to turn their lives around, get a fair chance.

Olympics | IOC launches Jones' investigation

Jones

The IOC opened an investigation Tuesday into doping allegations against Marion Jones, who could eventually be stripped of her five medals from the 2000 Olympics. International Olympic Committee president Jacques Rogge set up a disciplinary commission to look into the claims made by Victor Conte, head of the California-based lab accused of illegally distributing steroids.

Conte told ABC's "20/20" in a broadcast aired Friday that he gave Jones performance-enhancing drugs before and after the Sydney Olympics. He said he watched Jones inject herself with human growth hormone.

Jones won three gold medals (100 meters, 200 and 1,600 relay) and two bronze (long jump and 400 relay) in Sydney. She repeatedly has denied ever using banned drugs, and has threatened to sue Conte for defamation.

World Anti-Doping Agency chief Dick Pound, a senior IOC member, has said Jones should be stripped of her medals if Conte is telling the truth. Any decision on the medals would be made by the IOC executive board.

NBA | Malone steamed at Kobe; won't return to Lakers

Malone

Karl Malone has ruled out a return to the Los Angeles Lakers because of comments made by Kobe Bryant in a radio interview, Malone's agent said Tuesday.

"Karl is furious," agent Dwight Manley said. "He felt very disrespected and betrayed after personally being the first to stand up for Kobe over the last year throughout his rape charge and all he went through."

Manley said remarks made by Bryant on Monday, coupled with what the agent called "recent personal attacks made in private," led Malone to his decision.

Asked if Malone might play elsewhere, Manley replied, "This certainly opens up that possibility."

Bryant told XTRA on Monday he didn't believe Malone, who is recovering from knee surgery, would come back to the Lakers, calling it "just intuition."

"It's not really fair to hold it over the guys' heads that are here," Bryant said. "The guys that we have here are working hard, practicing hard every day. It's kind of tough for them to be looking over their shoulder, wondering if he's going to come back and then everybody is going to disappear."

NBA | League suspends Sprewell for fan incident

Sprewell

Latrell Sprewell was suspended for one game by the NBA on Tuesday for yelling a sexual vulgarity at a female fan during a game, the latest episode of a player clashing with spectators.

The penalty was harsher than those issued in the past by the league office for on-court outbursts. The NBA has been particularly concerned about conflicts between players and fans following a nasty brawl in Detroit 2 1/2 weeks ago that spilled into the stands.

Sprewell responded to a female heckler with a sexually vulgar term that was clearly picked up by a courtside microphone and broadcast by television stations KTLA in Los Angeles and KSTC in Minnesota.

MLB | Appier returning to Royals for another comeback

Kevin Appier agreed to another comeback attempt and settled Tuesday with the Kansas City Royals on a minor league contract.

Appier, who turned 37 Monday, made just two starts last season, going 0-1 with a 13.50 ERA in four inning. The right-hander, coming off surgery for a torn elbow tendon, left his April 23 start against Minnesota after one inning, went on the disabled list and didn't pitch again.

If he's added to the Royals' major league roster, he would get a $500,000, one-year contract.

The rules of attraction

K-State students sound off about which looks, traits in a mate turn them on

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Whether it is that twinkle in an eye or the way someone walks, humans' attraction for one another is found in many forms.

Although having different body structures, men tend to look for physical attraction where women seek relationships.

Betsy Bergen, professor in family studies and human services, said the hormonal instincts of male testosterone make it natural for them to look at the physicality of the female.

"In terms of attraction, it is normal for a male to look at beauty and whether the woman can bear his children. They take in a factor of their hips along with their overall beauty," Bergen said.

Bergen said women are more sensitive to touch and have greater sensitivity and caring.

"Women look for attraction in a man's physique and seek to be the provider," Bergen said.

A couple general physical features Bergen said men are attracted to are a women's breasts, hips, face and some common features women are attracted to in men are their eyes, face, butt, shoulders and if they are tall.

Jeremy Roberts, junior in mass communications, said attraction in the opposite sex is attributed with physical attraction, as well as a good personality.

"Usually the first thing I notice about a girl is her attitude, whether she is happy or not. Someone who smiles a lot," Roberts said. "If she has a killer smile, then I'm sold."

Roberts said clothes and fashion also play a part in attraction with males.

"If a girl is confident in what she wears, that's attractive. They shouldn't worry about what they look like, but worry about what they feel like," Roberts said.

Kallie McLaughlin, freshman in hotel and restaurant management, said her attraction in guys is featured by confidence.

"Confidence shows a high self-esteem, self-security and you can't begin a relationship with anybody if they are too shy to talk to you in the first place," McLaughlin said.

First impressions of guys are also important in attraction for McLaughlin.

"I look for someone who is put together and neat; they usually have more organized lifestyles and that's attractive," McLaughlin said.

The ideal man's personality for women is important, McLaughlin said, and not so much what they look like.

"A guy, for me, has to have ambition and going somewhere in life. They must have similar tastes in entertainment and adventurous. Money isn't really important, but spending time with me is," McLaughlin said.

K-State student co-authors legal rights 'self-help' guide

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State has numerous professors who can add the title of "author" to their resume.

Whether it be an English professor with a collection of short stories or a psychology professor with a book on behavior patterns of teens, there are many published authors roaming campus.

Now, another one of K-State's students can be added to the list. Corbin Keech, a fourth year student in architecture, has co-authored a legal rights guide entitled "Dude, what are my rights? The self-help legal guide for ages 18-25."

The book is a sort-of legal aid for dummies, navigating readers through the ins and outs of the justice system. It breaks down laws, statutes and punishments for students who may find themselves in trouble and don't know what to do.

"Basically my job was to interpret the law for a 22-year-old," Keech said. "We broke down all the laws we address so it could be easily accessible for someone our age."

The "we" Keech is referring to is himself and co-author Charlie Fairchild. Fairchild has been practicing law in the Kansas City area for 24 years and developed most of the book's material.

"I had done a very basic amount of research," Fairchild said.

Keech came across this research one summer when he was a legal intern for Fairchild. He approached Fairchild about turning the book into a tool students like him could use.

"He was really adamant," Fairchild said. "He said 'this is something that would really be helpful for my age group.'"

Fairchild and Keech began going through the book and reformatting it to be desirable to college students. Fairchild's original research covered only Kansas law and was in textbook format. The current book covers all states and is in language that the typical student will understand.

Topics in the book range from driving under the influence to stalking to finding the right lawyer. Keech said he thinks the book would be a good gift for students new to college life, as well as those who have been around awhile.

The entire process of researching, writing and reformatting took Keech and Fairchild about 10 months to complete. It took another month to get the first copy off the printer.

The book is carried at Varney's Bookstore, Claflin Books and Copies and Hastings. There are plans to market it on Amazon.com and at Waldenbooks.

Though neither Fairchild nor Keech are certain how many copies they have sold, both feel the book is doing well.

"We knew it would be one of a kind, and there would be a need for it," Keech said. "But the response is beyond anything that we expected."

Keech said even though he had to work on the book daily, and sacrifice some of his social life, his hard work paid off.

"I missed a few nights out in Aggieville, but I think it's worth it," Keech said. "It was definitely a learning experience."

CELEB NEWS

Kanye West receives 10 Grammy nominations

Producer-turned-rapper Kanye West collected a leading 10 Grammy nominations Tuesday, including album of the year, for his innovative debut, "The College Dropout."

West's disc stood out in the rap landscape because of its atypical prose. It avoided the usual plotlines about sex, money and violence and touched on everything from religion to his own insecurities.

The performer, who isn't afraid to sing his own praises after claiming he was "definitely robbed" when he picked up no trophies at the American Music Awards, also had a nomination for best new artist and shared a songwriting bid for song of the year with his hit "Jesus Walks."

Usher and Alicia Keys, who collaborated on the hit "My Boo," followed West with eight nominations each, including album of the year for Keys' "The Diary of Alicia Keys" and Usher's "Confessions."

Motley Crue to reunite for world tour

The original members of 1980s glam metal band Motley Crue announced Monday a world reunion tour.

After a five-year hiatus, the big-haired, leather-clad Crue members are eager to slip back into the music.

With support from cable music television network VH1, the band — vocalist Vince Neil, drummer Tommy Lee, guitarist Mick Mars and bass player Nikki Sixx — plan a world tour beginning in February in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. The band will hit more than 60 cities in North America during two legs and play several festivals in Europe before wrapping up the tour in southeast Asia and Australia.

The band will release a double-CD greatest hits compilation with three new songs entitled "Red, White & Crue" in February.

AVIATION | Maintenance students keep plane fleet in working order

school has plenty of space for the students and for the department.

The hanger is full of 12 planes in various states of repair and disrepair.

"We have six Cessna 150s, two gliders, one motor glider, one low wing Piper Cherokee, one beach craft duke and three helicopters," Smith said. "Before we got planes from the flight program, but we now rely on private donations and government surplus."

The facilities are not the only reason why students choose Salina for their maintenance training as opposed to other flight schools like Purdue, Embry Riddle and Illinois State University at Carbondale.

"I chose Salina because of the staff," Gardner said. "These are all old mechanics. I was very impressed with the instructors when I was looking three years ago."

The students get to know the staff well because of the amount of time they spend with their instructors and because there were only 75 enrolled in the department this year.

"They are very good," Mike Newlin, freshman in aviation maintenance, said. "They are knowledgeable, and they will be there to help you."

At the end of the program, with either a certificate or a degree, students are tested with the Federal Aviation Administration. Once they pass the exam, students are eligible to work for the airlines or on any plane.

"Hand-selected students are sometimes employed by the flight maintenance group," Smith said.

"Typically there are only two or three spots. It is very competitive."

MAINTENANCE | Regents' report details extent of repairs needed

Many buildings need new windows, such as Anderson Hall. There are also many heating and cooling systems that need repaired.

One of the biggest updates needed is electrical routes. The 4,160-volt route was installed in 1923 and needs to be updated, Heptig said.

"We're upgrading it little by little," he said.

When a new building is added, it is also needs to be looked at for maintenance needs, said Gerald Carter, director of facility planning and university architect.

The addition to the Galachia Institute Building that is being built will not bring any more funds for maintenance, he said.

"As an addition goes, it's a little small, so we'll just have to use existing maintenance funds," Carter said.

Heptig said the men and women who work maintenance jobs do what they can and react quickly.

"They respond really, really good and fix major problems," he said.

MURRAY | Preliminary hearing begins for professor's murder trial

gaining custody of their daughter.

In Murray's preliminary trial Monday, Prosecutor Thomas Bath outlined the evidence before Judge Robert Fairchild.

According to the Lawrence Journal-World, Bath said police began surveilling Murray's home after Douglas County Sheriff's deputies discovered Ross's body in her home.

A baby sitter said Murray had left the couple's then four-year-old daughter Ciara Ross-Murray at her house between 8:15-8:20 a.m. that day. However, Murray told detectives it was at 8:45 a.m.

After leaving his daughter at the baby sitter, Murray told police he went back home to grade tests. He later said he left and drove to Paxico to shop for antiques. He told detectives he did not contact anyone in Paxico because he had turned around.

Detectives noticed injuries on Murray's fingers, which he claimed were from roughhousing with his daughter.

Computer evidence also showed Murray searched the Internet for information on poisons, how to kill someone and countries that do not extradite to the United States.

Did you know?
Thomas Murray case

Nov. 18, 2003
Thomas Murray's house was searched for clues in the investigation of the murder of his ex-wife, Ross.

Aug. 31, 2004
Murray was granted permission by a Riley County district judge to choose the company that would oversee the $300,000 left by Ross for her and Murray's daughter, Ciara Ross-Murray. Ross's parents, Danny and Judi Ross, wanted to oversee the money themselves because they suspected Murray of murdering Ross.

Oct. 4, 2004
Murray was arrested on a first-degree murder warrant during a traffic stop in Manhattan. He was charged later that afternoon. Bond was set at $1 million. Ross and Murray's five-year-old daughter, Ciara Ross-Murray, was put in the care of Ross's parents, Danny and Judi Ross.

Nov. 5, 2004
Ross-Murray's parents, Danny and Judi Ross, were granted custody of Ross and Murray's 5-year-old daughter, Ciara Ross-Murray.

Dec. 6, 2004
Judge Robert Fairchild began to hear testimony for Murray's preliminary hearing. Prosecutors presented evidence to show they had enough for Murray to stand trial for murder.

KEMP | Tipster refuses reward, asks for donation to Kemp fund

arresting Appleby, 29, who is charged with capital murder and attempted rape. He is being held on $1 million bond.

Crime Stoppers, a Kansas City agency that operates a hotline to help solve crimes, announced Monday that the tipster who provided the key information in the case asked that the $40,000 go to the Ali Kemp Educational Foundation.

Roger Kemp, father of the slain young woman whose family had contributed $24,000 toward the reward fund, said he was "floored" at the news.

"It just goes to show how wonderful people in Kansas City are," said Kemp.

The reward fund in the case actually totals $50,000, one of the largest ever raised for a Kansas City area crime. Authorities said $10,000 from the fund would be paid to another tipster.

Crime Stoppers officials said information from the second of the two tipsters was more significant, and thus that person was picked to get most of the tax-free reward money.

Both anonymous callers said they had noticed billboards about the unsolved crime, displays that had been donated by Lamar Advertising.

Craig Sarver, who helps coordinate Crime Stoppers, said there have been other occasions where tipsters requested that reward money they could have claimed go to a charity instead.

He said sometimes people call the hotline only because they wanted a reward, while others refuse to accept any money.

"Like with a drug house," he said. "They say, 'I don't want a reward, I just want this out of my neighborhood.'"

Sarver said Crime Stoppers officials don't know the identity of the Kemp case tipsters.

"Everything is truly anonymous," he said. "We give them code numbers."

Sarver said that Internal Revenue Service regulations require that the reward recipient remain anonymous. If not, he or she is subject to taxes on the reward.

Roger Kemp said the foundation named for his daughter already had about $100,000 and has awarded $1,000 scholarships to 11 area high school students, based on leadership and academic achievement.

Incoming soldiers play role in shaping community's future

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

How the Manhattan community responds to a new battalion at Fort Riley could affect the future of both the city and the base.

The opportunity to attract more soldiers to the base has affected community development, local schools and businesses, and perpetuated rumors that even more soldiers could follow.

Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said Fort Riley likely will stand a better chance of receiving additional soldiers if surrounding communities – including Manhattan – show they can provide housing and services for soldiers.

Early next year, the first of about 3,400 soldiers will be reassigned from Hawaii to Fort Riley. About 300 soldiers are expected in January or February, said Deb Skidmore, media relations officer at Fort Riley.

The unit from Hawaii is the 6th brigade, 25th Infantry Division. It is being transferred to Fort Riley as part of the military's reorganization efforts.

"The military will be watching to see how we as communities respond to that," Butler said. "Manhattan is responding well early on, and Junction City is as well."

Fort Riley is currently home to about 11,000 soldiers, and the new battalion will represent a 30-percent increase in the number of soldiers at the post.

The base formerly housed about 17,000 soldiers, until 1995, when most the 1st Infantry Division was moved to Germany. One brigade from the 1st Infantry Division remains at Fort Riley.

HOUSING

One of the primary concerns local officials have is about housing availability in the area. While Fort Riley is building temporary barracks to house soldiers, Skidmore said the post is not planning to provide housing for all the soldiers.

Instead, many soldiers will move into Junction City, Manhattan, Ogden and other surrounding communities.

"Fort Riley will not have enough housing for all the soldiers," Skidmore said. "We will depend on other communities to help provide housing."

Bernie Hayen, city finance director, said housing availability would be essential if Manhattan is to benefit from the incoming soldiers.

"There is not currently an abundance of housing," he said.

Education students ready for licensing plan

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas teachers will soon make the switch from being certified to licensed.

As of Sept. 1, 2005, teaching licenses will take the place of teaching certificates.

Martha Gage, director of teaching education and licensure for the Kansas Department of Education, said the change from certificates to licenses is basically just a name change.

"It has the same meaning," she said.

However, the process to acquire a license is different from what is required to receive a certificate.

Gage said teachers now have two tests to complete to receive a license.

"The first is a test of standard teaching skills," she said. "The second is a content test is for endorsement in a certain subject matter."

Under certification, teachers only need to take the test of standard teaching skills.

After completing the tests teachers may begin teaching. However, they are now required to do the Kansas Performance Assessment, where they keep a review of their class for their first two years of teaching.

Upon completion of the performance assessment teachers will then receive a full five-year teaching license.

Leslie Rader, instructor of elementary education, said many students have issues with the new performance assessment requirement.

"They dislike it, because it is an extra workload on top of the first two years of teaching being very stressful and beginning to get your feet on the

Displaced students reflect on experiences at K-State

Twenty-five students listen intently in their small animal medicine class a week before finals.

While the situation is familiar to all students before finals, these circumstances were different.

Hurricane Ivan destroyed the Veterinary Medicine school at St. George University in Grenada, and the third-year students came to K-State in October. First-year students went to Purdue University, and second-year students to North Carolina State.

Sixty-one third-year students came to K-State to refrain from missing the remainder of the term after the storm.

The classroom the students sit in is in the Veterinary Medicine Library, a room with a sign posted outside that said, "Reserved for St. George University students Oct. 1 - Dec. 23."

The students were new to K-State, but most will complete their schooling at K-State after their finals next week. The sixth-term students from Grenada will not return to the home they knew before Manhattan, but instead will complete their fourth year in veterinary school here.

Andrea DiBartolo, third-year student originally from Chicago, said she will be moving to Minnesota to complete her clinical

Capstone Development constructing new condos aimed at K-State sports fans

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Condominiums targeting K-State sports fans will soon be built within walking distance from KSU Stadium.

Capstone Development is building a 4-story complex with 24 living units adjacent to their University Commons apartment complex on College Avenue.

Fieldhouse Sports Lofts will include four other college town developments, along with a development near the Green Bay Packers' Lambeau Field in Wisconsin.

Will Bru, senior vice president for Fieldhouse Sports Lofts, said the condos will be fan-oriented.

"We are looking at schools that have great athletic traditions," he said.

K-State was selected as a development site because of Capstone's investment in University Commons, Bru said.

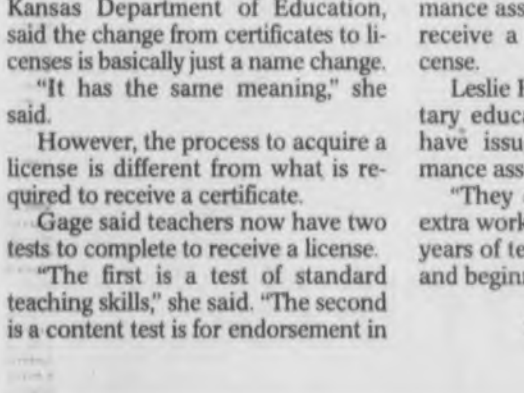
"We already own property in Manhattan," he said. "Plus, K-State has a tremendous following and loyal fans."

Eric Cattell, assistant director for planning for the City of Manhattan, said the condominium development is paving the way for a new market in the city.

"It expands the marketability of Manhattan as a second-home market," Cattell said. "It's apparently a tight-niched group they're trying to target."

Capstone hopes to break ground this summer. Bru said the condos should be complete in the spring or summer of 2006 in preparation for football season.

The Manhattan Mercury reported the condominiums would range in price from $150,000 to $600,000 per unit.



However, Bru said the unit price will be much lower.

"The number in the Mercury had to do with a broad range of prices including the Green Bay development," he said.

"We haven't priced Manhattan yet. It will be a whole lot less than that."

The final development plan for the complex will be reviewed Dec. 20 by the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board. If approved, it will be presented Jan. 4 to the City Commission.

Military deaths
The U.S. military said Wednesday that the number of American combat deaths in Iraq since the start of the war rose to 1,001. The total number who have died since March 2003 is 1,278.

Intelligence
Congress ordered the biggest overhaul of U.S. intelligence in a half-century Wednesday, replacing a network geared to the Cold War fight with a post-Sept. 11 structure requiring military and civilian spy agencies to work together.

Kansas law
Kansas law enforcement officials are considering following Oklahoma's lead in asking for a restriction on the purchase of Sudafed allergy tablet medication in an effort to reduce the number of methamphetamine labs in the state.

Breast cancer
A newer drug prevented far more breast cancers from recurring in older women than the old standby and with far fewer side effects, doctors said Wednesday. Cancer specialists said Arimidex is likely to become the first-choice treatment.

DIVERSIONS

A WASTE OF TIME — BUT HEY, IT'S BETTER THAN LECTURE

While official teacher evaluations have been going on in most K-State courses in the past few weeks, there are a number of online outlets for students who weren't satisfied with the paper process, or those that have lots of time on their hands.

The following Web sites are devoted to rating and assessing the performance of college faculty via the cooperation of ordinary college students.

1 | PICK-A-PROF

http://www.pick-a-prof.com

Created by two Texas A&M graduates, the Pick-a-Prof system includes student reviews that feature important information about professors, such as homework load, lecture style, exam types, attendance policies.

The student reviews also include study tips and other features to help visitors gauge their level of interest in taking a class with a certain professor.

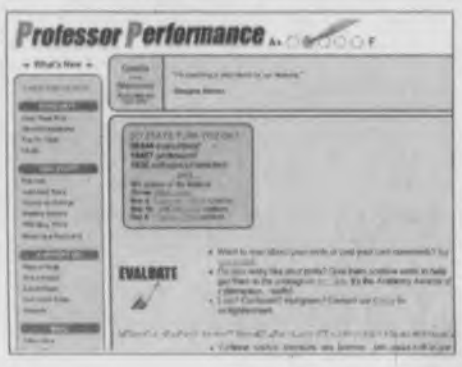
Along with student reviews of professors, the site features a schedule planner and textbook reservation section.

Registration is required for access.

2 | RATE MY PROFESSORS

http://www.ratemyprofessor.com

This particular site touts its large number of ratings. More than 2.6 million reviews have been logged for more than 470,000 professors at 4,274 schools of higher education.



Visitors to the site can quickly select the state in which their school is. Just another short click away is an alphabetical listing of all the professors from that particular school that have been rated. As of Wednesday evening, Rate My Professors had ratings available for 405 professors at K-State.

At the top of each professor's page is a statistical box listing the number of ratings the professor has received, as well as their statistical averages (based on a maximum score of 5) on traits such as easiness, helpfulness, clarity, "hotness" and overall quality.

Each rating displays which class the rating is for, as well as comments submitted by the student reviewer.

3 | PROFESSOR PERFORMANCE

http://www.professorperformance.com

While Professor Performance does not have as many professor reviews as some sites, there are a number of other features the site promotes.

With more than 56,000 evaluations for more than 18,000 professors at 1,625 schools, Professor Performance also features a humor section, free e-Postcards and "columns on beer, dating and everything in between."

The many K-State professors evaluated on the site receive a letter grade just like students. Each professor's page includes an overall grade, as well as grades on coolness, ease and worth. Registration is not required to view or submit evaluations.

4 | RATINGS ONLINE

http://www.ratingsonline.com

Ratings Online offers students to sound off on a professor's homework load, the number of quizzes and tests, grading policies and their overall focus, organization and enthusiasm.

The site does require registration, and the site includes message boards, a search engine and a list of the most-viewed professors on the site.

While the site is fully functioning, there is only one professor listed for K-State, and the message board for the university is devoid of comments.

Keeping things up to par

K-State students help manage, maintain Colbert Hills Golf Course

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Everyday, students work to keep the Colbert Hills Golf Course up to par.

Students in K-State's golf course management program have an opportunity like no other university in the United States.

These students help with the course up-keep and management.

"The students help manage the whole course," said Dave Gourley, general manager and director of golf operations at Colbert Hills. "They do everything from mowing the greens, spraying the greens, bunkers and course set-up."

The par-3 course at Colbert Hills is run almost entirely by K-State students.

"We designate three interns to be in charge of the par-3 course," Dave Gourley said.

Colbert Hills has really put K-State on the map in terms of golf course management material.

"Five years ago all they were all going to the Kansas City area, Topeka and other local areas," Dave Gourley said. "Now thanks to the program that we have going out here now they are getting offers for jobs and internships all over the country.

Overall, he said, it is a fantastic program that gives students everything they need to be successful after college.

"We complement their careers and give them a practical perspective through this amazing program," Dave Gourley said.

Matt Gourley, sophomore in golf course management and assistant superintendent at Colbert Hills, said students have an opportunity they won't get anywhere else in the country.

"You will learn more out here than you will at any other golf course," Matt Gourley said.

"The students help manage the whole course. They do everything from mowing the greens, spraying the greens, bunkers and course set-up."

Dave Gourley
GENERAL MANAGER AND DIRECTOR OF GOLF OPERATIONS AT COLBERT HILLS

"There is nothing that they won't teach me.

"Any question I ask they will have the right answer for me."

Students learn valuable knowledge and gain fantastic experience from working at a world class facility, such as Colbert Hills.

"We do general maintenance work, such as mowing greens, spraying greens and top dressing," Matt Gourley said. "We also have a program where new people coming in become superintendent for a week.

Becoming superintendent for a week provides a unique perspective into what it takes to run a world-class golf course, Matt Gourley said.

"Overall, I've learned so much already," he said. "I know that I can now manage people better and know so much more and golf course management."

Colbert Hills gives students experience and direction for their careers in golf course management, Matt Gourley said.

"I know I want to be a superintendent at a golf course," he said. "Somewhere north or somewhere south – I don't care as long as it is somewhere."

TO THE POINT

Area must prepare for base realignment

The base realignment and closure process has started in areas around the nation, but Fort Riley's time will soon come, the first as soon as early 2005.

The process will test the surrounding area's feasibility of allowing the military to find homes. The chances of a battalion stationed at Fort Riley returning from Hawaii can affect the base and the City of Manhattan.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

When the process begins, the city should take it as a preliminary trial for other troops that might be coming to the area, as well as far into the future. The city needs to use the returning soldiers to predict how well they can provide housing and other services for soldiers.

Rental units are being constructed, but that is merely a beginning for the thousands expected to return to the area.

Three-hundred people are expected to return as early as January, but a total of 3,400 from the same brigade are expected to return. Other housing needs to be properly arranged and discussions should begin to figure out how to best handle the situation.

The schools in Manhattan should plan accordingly, as many of the soldiers will return with families. General business districts should plan how to best occupy the influx of people returning to the area.

The BRAC process will start soon enough, but the city, school districts and businesses should be ready.

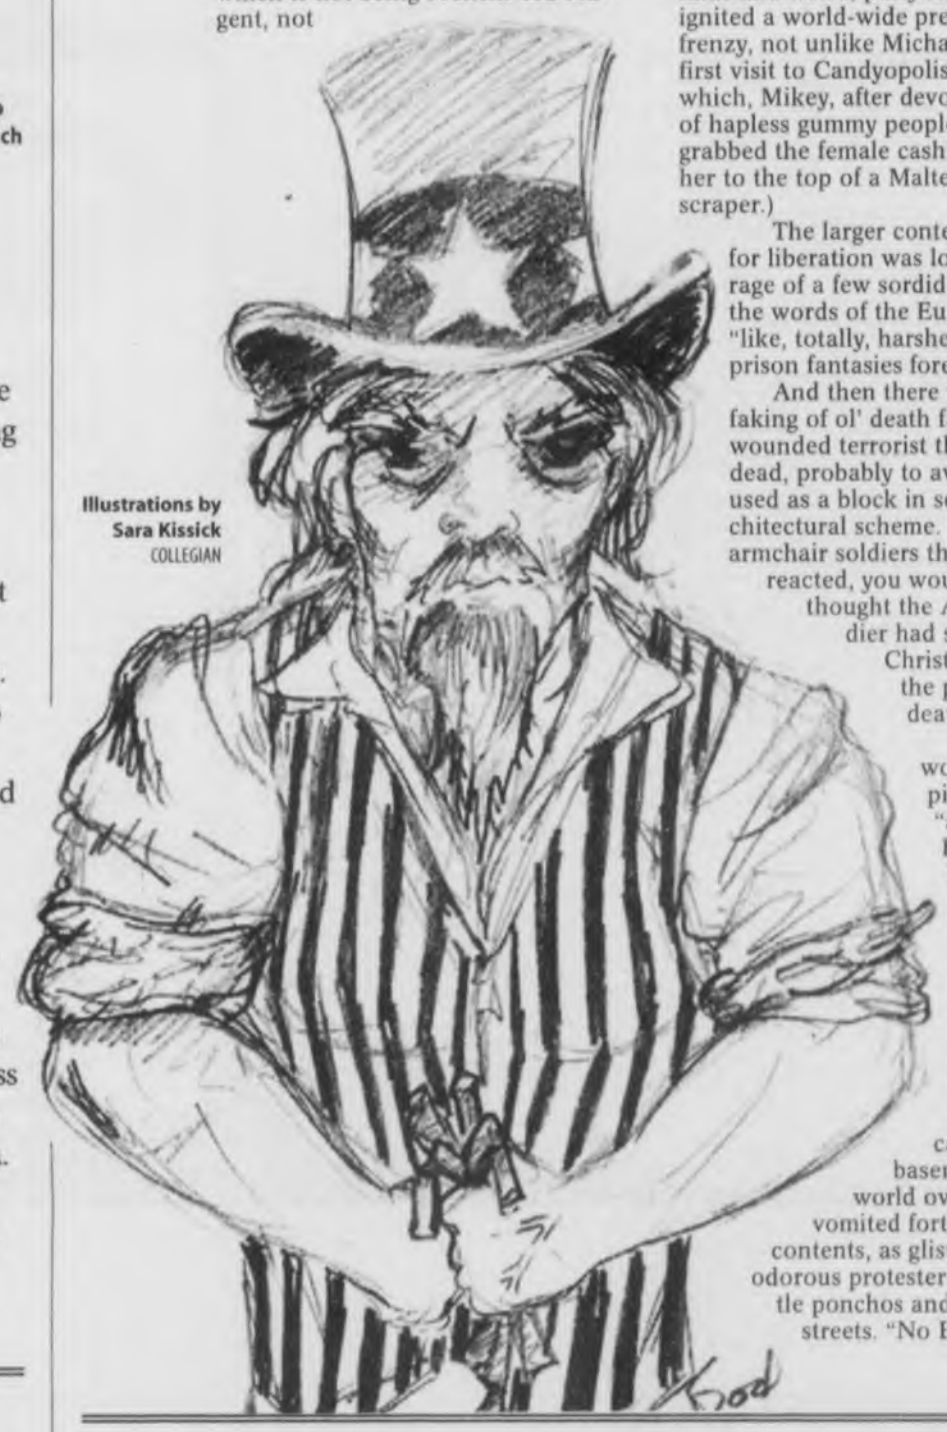
America the beautiful

Despite critics, United States remains the place to be



GRANT REICHERT

There's a certain kind of people out there, an ignorant lot, who cling to the notion of "my country right or wrong."

Fortunately, I don't have to worry about falling into such a close-minded philosophy, because America is never wrong.

Besides this, being an American has many other benefits, foremost of which is not being French. Ted Nugent, not being German and all-you-can-eat steak buffets also rank highly.

Illustrations by Sara Kissick COLLEGIAN

Despite this, America is the favorite whipping boy of media worldwide, from outlets as varied as Al-Jazeera and The New York Times. One, obviously, is an infamous mouthpiece of vicious anti-American propaganda and an outrageous disseminator of flawed information.

The other is based in the Middle East.

Abu Ghraib, with its naked pyramids and weird, puffy-faced heroine, ignited a world-wide press feeding frenzy, not unlike Michael Moore's first visit to Candyopolis (during which, Mikey, after devouring scores of hapless gummy people, angrily grabbed the female cashier and carried her to the top of a Malted Milk skyscraper.)

The larger context of a war for liberation was lost in the outrage of a few sordid pics, which in the words of the European media, "like, totally, harshed on our prison fantasies forever, dude."

And then there was the defaking of ol' death faker, the wounded terrorist that played dead, probably to avoid being used as a block in some nude architectural scheme. The way leftist armchair soldiers the world over reacted, you would have thought the American soldier had shot the risen Christ (incidentally the patron saint of death-fakers).

While the world was occupied with these "atrocities," France, population: cheese, has imperialistically ventured into the Ivory Coast to reassert flagging colonialist ties. If this had been America, parents' basements the world over would've vomited forth their greasy contents, as glistening, malodorous protesters donned battle ponchos and hit the streets. "No Blood for Whatever-the-hell-the-Ivory-Coast-Produces" would've been written on signs, buildings, and the slow-moving elderly.

During this intervention, the French have twice fired on unarmed, generally nonbelligerent protesters, with no warning shots. Death estimates range from 20-60.

In these two shootings, France has committed atrocities greater than the degradation of Abu Ghraib or the liquidation of opossum boy.

And yet, media interest level= nonchalant whistling; some random scratching; "What did you say about Abu Ghraib? Just now, you were like 'France blah blah ABU GHRAIB!!!! blah blah.' There were pyramids there, you know, atrocity-ones, built like if Ramses the Great tried to make a low budget porno."

Again, imagine if America had done something like this. Inkwells would run dry decrying the massacre of the oppressed Ivorian masses.

The UN would declare an international day of solidarity with the Ivorian people, and, again, hippies would roll some war-doobies for the coming battles with "The Man." ("The Man," as in, "Ah, daddy, c'mon, why can't I go out and march? I am 47 after all.")

This story does seem ridiculous on its face, given that the protesters were actually hit and the French aren't exactly world-renowned for their martial expertise. Maybe they tried to fire warning shots into the air, but just missed.

Either way, American superiority is clear. For every time that America is compared to Nazi Germany, know that actual neo-Nazis in Germany and the anti-Semitic far right in France are both gaining in elections.

When people decry the loss of civil liberties in America, know that liberal, tolerant little Holland, reeling from the death of one man at the hands of an Islamic fundie, is pushing for xenophobic laws that make the Patriot Act look like a civil libertarian's dream come true.

America: is there any finer country? Uh, that question was rhetorical, but, yeah, I guess Paraguay's cool too, in its own way.

Canada's failings ultimately fixable

JAMES HURLA

Those crazy Canucks are at it again.

It seems that no matter how much they do it or how often they prove themselves, Canadians never get tired of showing that they're really just not quite good enough to be Americans.

Sure, there are things they do well.

But they can't even produce a decent amount of strippers.

I'd like to believe that Canadian women simply are above sinking to this immoral practice, but intuition tells me it's more likely that flannel tassels and beards don't do the job – even north of the border.

In the tradition of adding "-gate" to any type of governmental misdeed, Canada has found itself in the spotlight with Strippergate.

Records show the government has been importing strippers from Europe by making work visas more readily available for exotic dancers than for other, slightly more modest occupations. America, although rampant with crime, drugs, sexual deviancy and myriad other sins, at least never had "Most interesting way I can pick up a dollar bill" on our visa applications. Strippergate, though, is only the most recent in a list of failures by our syrup-producing, curling, snow-covered, hairy neighbors. Take, for instance, defeating the British.

We broke our foot off in King George III's patoot in the 18th century, but Canada is still eating crumbs from the monarchical table. And parts of Canada still speak French – how do you not defeat the French for your independence? I actually was briefly president of the country, but I returned control to the people when they realized I was only angry because I didn't get my French fries.

Canada's secret weapon for national defense is, and always has been, that it is close to the United States.

The U.S. missile-defense system will undoubtedly benefit Canadians. The nation has been protected simply by hiding behind its big, bad neighbor. And how do they repay us? By sending us beer commercials with a perverted bear.

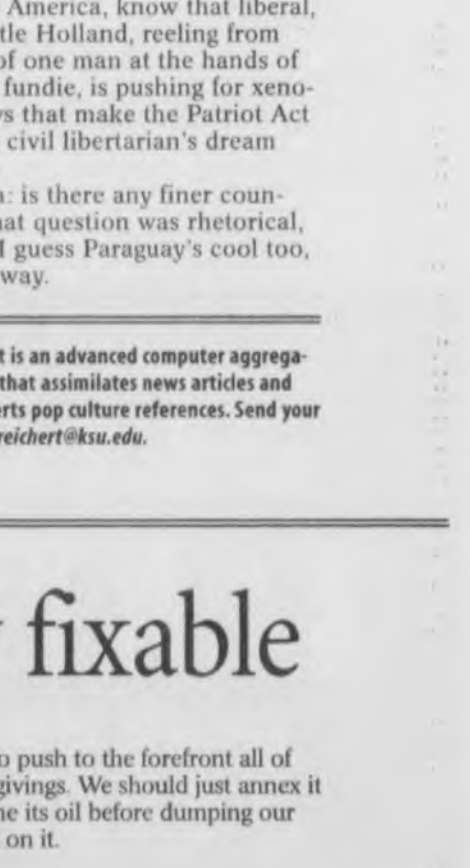
When President Bush visited Canada last week, he thanked those in the crowd for their warm welcome – especially those who waved with all five fingers.

This is the level of political evolution in the country – giving the one-finger salute to the most powerful man in the free world.

Freaking hippies.

At least people in the Middle East take the time to construct effigies of Bush to burn in the streets during riots. Canadians are so lazy. They always take the easy way out.

The list of Canadian failures goes on and on. The Montreal Expos. A submarine fire this summer. WWF wrestler The Mountie. Canadian bacon.



To be fair though, Canada has produced several winners who had successful careers.

Take for instance Jim Carrey (living in Hollywood), Wayne Gretzky (retired in LA) and John Candy (dead). These success stories didn't let a little thing like being born into 200 years of shame hold them down.

No, they rose above all that and moved out.

It's a shame it takes a debacle like Strippergate to push to the forefront all of Canada's misgivings. We should just annex it so we can mine its oil before dumping our nuclear waste on it.

Even those folks in Utah are better than Canadians.

But I have confidence in the resolve of the Canadian people. I know that the government can recover from this stripper scandal.

No word yet on whether Canada will walk around gathering dollar bills once the scandal ends.

James is certain that being drafted into the military is a far better fate than defecting to Canada. He'll be on-stage Friday night, and doesn't do anything kinky.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444 -or- fourum@spub.ksu.edu

Dead week means give students so much homework and new material that they're dead by the end of the week.

To the faculty member in the white Honda Accord: please don't run over the grads on our way to class. We're stressed enough already.

One time I wanted this hot guy that gave me candy in Thursday's Human Development class to know I wanted his number, and by the time the Collegian published it, the class was over. Thanks.

To the guy too lazy to bake cinnamon rolls: come up with your own material. Don't steal some standup comedian's bit that you saw on Comedy Central.

Yeah. I like how everyone starts out saying "yeah" in the fourum. Yeah.

Oops... you broke it.

How come every time I call the fourum I get the answering machine?

Oh, what a blow that phantom gave me.

OK, so far today I've seen two people wearing shorts and a guy in a T-shirt. Honestly people, it's freezing outside, put some clothes on.

Dear Collegian: your staff never had a problem with racism, it's got one with hate.

What're you looking at this for, you can't read.

Willie thinks my roommate's sexy.

To Altaf Karim: You obviously implied that the United States is imperialistic. If that were so, wouldn't we be taking countries over, not liberating them?

My name is Butters Montoya. You killed my father, prepare to die.

Attention all men: having a girlfriend hall-of-fame in your wallet will not help you win over the heart of another girl.

Well, I have to say that Ten til Blue sucks, and that they should just keep playing covers. I'm nodding.

OK, perhaps it's just cause I'm not a dancer, but seriously, what is up with the dance pants with the cutoff sweats over them. I mean really, do they, are they the only ones that get to dress weird?

Officials warn of drugged driving

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite efforts to reduce drunken and drugged driving nationally over the past two decades, some feel the influence of other drugs – specifically marijuana – on driving are often overlooked by a wide number of people when they choose to get behind the wheel.

As the country enters the midway point of National Drunk and Drugged Driving Prevention Month, public health and safety officials across the nation are raising awareness and educating citizens about the dangers of driving while under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs.

There is little doubt attempts to curb drunk driving have seen success, as a wide-range of statistics from Mothers Against Drunk Driving show alcohol-related traffic fatalities have decreased dramatically over the past two decades.

However, the message drugs can be just as dangerous as alcohol when driving is struggling to get across to many people, according to Starla Bocanegra, director of the Northeast Kansas Regional Prevention Center in Manhattan.

Bocanegra said a common perception is marijuana does not have the negative effects alcohol and other drugs do.

"A lot of people think marijuana is safe, but people don't realize all the effects," Bocanegra said. "Marijuana has just as many detrimental effects as alcohol (on a person's driving ability)."

Bocanegra said a driver's vision is altered and reaction time is reduced under the influence of marijuana among other negative effects.

"First to go is judgment, so you can't make decisions as accurately," Bocanegra said.

Action to prevent drugged driving is now being taken seriously at the White House. Recently, the Bush Administration launched a $10 million ad campaign focusing on marijuana and driving.

John Walters, the Bush administration's drug policy director, unveiled the new advertisement Dec. 2 aimed directly at teens and parents about the dangers of drugged driving.

"Driving sober means no alcohol, no marijuana, no drugs," said Walters as he unveiled the new ad.

A nationwide survey of 3,574 middle and high school students this spring by Students Against Destructive Decisions and Liberty Mutual Insurance found that while 30 percent of teens cited "planning to drive" as a reason not to drink, only 18 percent said "planning to drive" should be a factor to not take drugs.

Kansas Highway Patrol spokesperson John Eichkorn said the organization has a simple stance towards drunken and drugged driving.

"Our approach is always educate and then enforce," Eichkorn said.

Eichkorn said efforts to curb drunken and drugged driving are stepped up during this month, as impaired driving has been shown to consistently increase during the holiday season.

"We are working with the Kansas Department of Transportation, talking with the public about alternatives and participating with ad campaigns," Eichkorn said. "It's a multi-organizational effort."

Though a large amount of resources are going into drunken and drugged driving prevention, the question still remains as to how much focus is placed on the latter.

Capt. Brad Schoen, of the Riley County Police Department, said establishing that a person is under the influence of drugs other than alcohol can be difficult.

"Provability is a bit of an issue," Schoen said. "With drunk driving, all you have to show is that a person has over ground," she said.

While she understands where the students are coming from, Rader said it will be worth it in the long run.

"It's actually very good professional development for them, but it won't feel that way for them until they complete it," she said.

Rader said when the College of Education learned about the performance assessment requirement of the new licensure, they adapted it in their courses.

"The portfolio system that student teachers and Block A and B students have to take are stepping stones to the KPA," she said.

Diane Murphy, licensing officer for the College of Education, said current teachers who apply for a new license will not have to take the tests unless they are adding subject endorsements.

"If you are currently teaching, when you reapply for your current certificate, you will get a new license instead," she said.

Gage said while the requirements for a license are more than certification, they are in place to better the quality of education.

"How can you argue with a test to demonstrate that you have the knowledge to go out and be a teacher?," she said.

"It's important that we assure the public that the teachers we give licenses to are well prepared to go out in the public and help kids learn."

Men's basketball deserves fan boost

MICHAEL ASHFORD

Last week, I brought up the idea of holding a basketball game in Ahearn Field House once a year.

While I still think it is a great idea, and I will continue to ask for it, I want to clear up some things.

I'm not sure I made myself clear enough last week, because some people saw my opinion on the issue as a slam towards Bramlage Coliseum.

Others thought it would be best if I used the power of the press to tell students to get out to the games.

Let me say now that I like Bramlage Coliseum, and I agree, students need to get out and support this team.

For starters, I think Bramlage has the potential to be an awesome basketball arena. In fact, I know it is a great place for basketball games.

Let me explain.

In the last two seasons, K-State was host to two huge basketball games that proved Bramlage can be an intimidating place to play.

The first was a men's game in the 2003-04 season against Bobby Knight's Texas Tech Red Raiders.

It was a full house that night, and the atmosphere was incredible.

The students showed up in full force, the team played lights out, and the Wildcats ran away from the No. 23 Red Raiders for a 66-44 win.

It was an awesome basketball game and an even better basketball experience.

The students were ferocious. The arena was packed, and it was loud as hell.

The second game was the season finale against Texas last year.

A national television audience watched, as K-State won a defensive battle versus the No. 10 Longhorns, 58-48.

Anyone who watched the game or was there remembers the emotion after the win. The students rushed the court and celebrated with the team. It is one of the most replayed images this year at the basketball games, because it really was a high point last season.

The point of all this is more students need to show up to make Bramlage rock like I know it can.

If you went to either of the games I just described, then you know the potential is there for K-State to hold an unbelievable homecourt advantage, and I didn't even say anything about the women's basketball team.

K-State's women's team has played to packed houses the last three years, and that has made Bramlage a beast of an arena for opposing teams.

But we all know men's games are a different breed. The typical fan at a men's game is a little rowdier, and the games have more action and aren't geared towards families like the women's games. This makes for an atmosphere that can be electric at times.

Add in the fact that the Wildcats are now 5-0, and there should be no reason why the seats aren't being filled more than they are now.

So come on students, get it in gear. Get out to Bramlage and support this team.

I know many of you have student season tickets. Otherwise, where would all the students come from during the KU game?

This team is better than the last few years. It is trying hard, and it deserves better support.

Don't be like the rest of the Manhattan community and sit around at home during a game.

Make Bramlage the arena it can be – an intimidating court for other teams and rowdy home for our Wildcats.

Former K-State basketball star Ohlde playing a different role with team

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a record-setting four-year career at K-State and a WNBA season under her belt, former Wildcat women's basketball standout Nicole Ohlde has returned to Manhattan to do the next logical thing – become a statistician.

Actually, Ohlde is back at K-State to complete her degree, but when she is not finishing her coursework, you can find her at the end of the Wildcat bench cheering on her former teammates and writing down stats during basketball games.

So with a year on the WNBA's Minnesota Lynx to her name, is she another coach for the Wildcats?

"Not really," Ohlde said

Instead, she said she tries to keep a low profile when she is with the team.

"I think we have pretty good coaches that make up for that," Ohlde said. "They pretty much cover everything, and I sit there and cover my stats."

Junior Jessica McFarland said Ohlde's presence is felt every now and then.

"In the middle of the game, you don't really notice her too much. Unless you have to come out and slap everybody's hands, and then you see her down there," McFarland said. "She's there for us. She's a good bench support person."

Ohlde left K-State as the school's all-time leader in points, rebounds and blocks, and she became the highest Wildcat ever drafted when the Lynx took her as the No. 6 pick last spring.

Since returning to the place where she had so much success, Ohlde said things are different now that she is no longer wearing a K-State uniform.

"It's definitely an adjustment from the past four years when I was playing and getting excited to be out on the court," Ohlde said. "But it's also good for me. I get to see more of the game and learn more about it, because I am looking at it from a different aspect."

Senior Brie Madden, who has started at the center position vacated by Ohlde, said she is happy to have Ohlde around the team.

"I love her to death, and I'm glad she's here," Madden said. "I'm glad she can be part of this team in a different way than usual. She's still part of the family."

Even though she left K-State an all-star, the success didn't stop there for Ohlde.

She had a stellar rookie season with the Lynx, as she finished third in the WNBA Rookie of the Year voting.

The Clay Center, Kan., native ranked first among all rookies in rebounding, blocks and field-goal accuracy. She averaged 11.7 points per game in leading the Lynx to the playoffs.

Ohlde said the subject of her first professional season does not come up too often with her old teammates.

"Some of them have asked me some stuff about it, but for the most part, I just watch them do their thing," Ohlde said.

As it turns out, Ohlde might one day be doing more than watching.

Ohlde said she has thought about

Intramural volleyball ends tonight

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The conclusion of the fall intramural volleyball season is near, as teams compete to be crowned division champion tonight at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Recreational Services Intramural Coordinator John Wondra said the fall intramural season has gone by quickly, and overall the volleyball season went smoothly.

"There weren't any major problems. There are always teams that forfeit for one reason or another, but volleyball is one of the five major team sports that has the least number of forfeits," Wondra said.

Nyla Polli, senior in industrial and manufacturing systems engineering, plays on a co-rec team and said her team has done well. Polli's team has a 4-1 record on the regular season, winning both postseason games so far.

Polli said her team is out to play for the competition and having fun is just an added bonus.

"We want to win, but it is good exercise, and I really like the team aspect. You can come to the Rec anytime for yourself, but this lets you get out and exercise and do something with your friends," Polli said.

Ashley Millette, sophomore in biology, said her team is out to win, but the team members are also in it for the camaraderie.

Millette's team, the Lady Mustangs, is an all-female team made up of students who played together in high school. So far the team has a record of 7-1, which includes two postseason wins.

Matt Kettle, sophomore in industrial engineering and member of Beta Theta Pi fraternity, goes down to make a dig during the third game of the match against Sigma Phi Epsilon on Wednesday evening at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

She said one of the benefits of playing together so long is the team has great chemistry and can anticipate each others' moves during the game.

She said even though the atmosphere is different from high school, the team's ultimate goal is to win in the championship

"We want to win it all. The competition is not as intense as high school, so we're playing more for fun, but it's still really competitive," she said.

Millette said the team had a tough start, but it has improved over the season.

"We lost the first game, but it was partly because we hadn't practiced or played in a long time. Since then, I think we have consistently improved," Millette said.

Wondra said one of the goals of the intramural program is to get students out and participating in a physical activity while having fun. He also said there was increased participation in all

Volleyball | Hejjas named first team All-Central Region

K-State's Vali Hejjas was named to the 2004 AVCA All-Central Region first team and fellow senior Gabby Guerre was honorable mention, the American Volleyball Coaches Association announced on Wednesday. The picks make both eligible for All-America consideration.

Hejjas

Hejjas was a two-time Big 12 Conference Player of the Week selection this year and was named First Team All-Big 12 for the second straight year. The 5-foot-11 outside hitter led the Wildcats with 437 kills on .283 hitting this season.

Guerre was only the second Wildcat ever to be named to the conference's first team three times. Also a three-time Academic All-Big 12 selection, the 6-foot-1 setter is second on the K-State all-time career assists list with 4,943.

The Wildcat volleyball team finished its 2004 season with a 20-11 record after advancing to the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

Track & Field | Team signs 3 more recruits for 2005-06

The K-State track and field program announced the additions of three recruits — Sara Callier of Portland, Ore., Adam Fretwell of Houston and Kayla Smith of Concordia, Kan. on Wednesday for the 2005-06 season.

Callier ranks among the national leaders in the girl's triple jump at 39-05.00 for Benson Polytechnic High.

In Fretwell, the Wildcats will be getting the Texas high school record holder in the decathlon. He was third in the nation last year in the decathlon at the Junior International level.

Smith is the reigning Kansas High School State 4A champion in the shot put. The Concordia High School product had the 15th-best throw in the nation in 2004.

NBA | Players, fans charged for involvement in brawl

Five Indiana Pacers and five fans were charged Wednesday for fighting during the melee that broke out at the end of a nationally televised game against the Detroit Pistons last month.

Artest

Players Ron Artest, Stephen Jackson, David Harrison and Anthony Johnson were charged with one count of assault and battery in one of the worst brawls in U.S. sports history. Jermaine O'Neal, a three-time NBA All-Star, was charged with two counts of assault and battery.

All the fans were charged with misdemeanor assault and battery, including Pistons star Ben Wallace's brother, David. Bryant Jackson also was charged with felony assault for throwing a chair into the fray, Oakland County prosecutor David Gorcyca said.

The misdemeanor carries up to three months in jail and a fine of up to $500, and the felony carries up to four years in prison. Gorcyca, however, said the players and fans would probably face probation and fines if convicted.

Gorcyca singled out spectator John Green, who faces two assault counts and, the prosecutor said, "single-handedly incited this whole interaction between the fans and players and probably is the one that's most culpable." Green is accused of throwing a cup at Artest, splashing him and sparking the brawl.

Football | Finalists chosen for Heisman Trophy

Jason White has a chance to join Archie Griffin as a two-time Heisman Trophy winner.

White, the Oklahoma quarterback who won last year's Heisman, was chosen Wednesday as one of five finalists for college football's most prestigious individual title.

Joining White for Saturday's award ceremony in New York will be his Oklahoma teammate Adrian Peterson, Southern California teammates Matt Leinart and Reggie Bush, and Utah quarterback Alex Smith.

Griffin, Ohio State's great running back, won the Heisman in 1974 and 1975 and is the only two-time winner.

Parent of K-State student publishes easy-to-do cookbook for students

By Alison Filla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mary-Lane Kamberg, author and mother of a K-State student, has written an easy-to-use cookbook titled, "The I Don't Know How to Cook Book."

She said she got the idea when her older daughter kept calling from K-State for recipes.

This was Kamberg's first solo writing experience, and she said the whole process was not easy.

"My editor liked the idea but wanted me to expand it for a broader audience," Kamberg said.

Kamberg

"He wanted me to add harder recipes too, so that once someone gets started, they can try something a little more difficult. The recipes are graded easy, medium and hard."

Kamberg said the book was written with the assumption that the reader would know nothing about cooking. It includes instructions on cooking basic kinds of meat and all the major vegetables. It also has a glossary of cooking terms.

The recipes in the book are chosen from the favorites of friends and family. She said she is so grateful to all those who contributed.

"I'm in a writer's group, and I sent an e-mail asking them to send me their favorite recipes. The book is a collection of the favorites of a bunch of people," Kamberg said.

Kamberg's original audience was college students, singles and people living on their own for the first time. However, she said the book has found unusual audiences, especially older widowers.

The book has been a hit, selling out in five weeks and going to a second printing.

She has spoken to numerous groups and done many book signings. She said her book is available at Varney's, Borders, Barnes and Noble and Amazon.com.

"My editor is happy. I'm happy. It's a fabulous book. I wish I'd had it when I first got married," Kamberg said.

How to Make the Best Chili Ever

If you like spicy chili, this recipe is for you. Serve with saltine crackers, shredded Cheddar cheese, and sour cream if you can't take the "heat." Yields about 2 quarts.

What you need:
- 2 pounds ground beef
- 1 1.25-ounce package chili seasoning mix
- 1/4 teaspoon garlic salt
- Salt and pepper, to taste
- Chili powder, to taste (about 1 to 3 teaspoons)
- 1 15.5-ounce can kidney beans
- 2 15.75-ounce cans hot chili beans
- 1 15-ounce can tomato sauce for chili
- 1 12-ounce can tomato paste

What You Do:
1. In a large frying pan, brown ground beef along with chili seasoning mix, garlic salt, salt, pepper and chili powder. Drain. Place in a Dutch Oven, stewpot or 2-quart slow cooker.
2. Drain kidney beans and chili beans. Stir into the ground beef mixture. Stir in tomato paste and tomato sauce. Cover and cook over low heat on the stovetop or high heat in a slow cooker until warmed through. For best flavor, cook at least 1 hour longer to let seasonings mingle.

Holidays offer spirited beverages aplenty

The Christmas holiday is probably the biggest source of migraines all year, and sometimes six or seven doses of ibuprofen or acetometaphen aren't enough.

With this in mind, I've researched several "special" holiday drinks from around the world to help you cope.

Egg nog, which literally means "eggs in a small cup," according to www.whatscookingamerica.net, is a classic drink on both sides of the Atlantic, and a necessity for my good friend and our favorite style guru, Matt Groneman (I think it's foul). Mexico also offers a strikingly similar version called Rompope.

Originating in England as an upper-class drink in the 17th century (most Londoners didn't have ready access to milk), it consists of eggs, milk, sugar, vanilla extract, cream and booze.

To make it, refrigerate all your ingredients beforehand, then beat the eggs for two to three minutes and gradually add sugar, vanilla and nutmeg to taste. All you have to do now is stir in the milk and cream and booze. The traditional spiker is rum. I recommend Bacardi 151 to cover the taste of the nog.

Russia is one of the largest countries on the globe and has one of the most complicated histories of any modern nation. So, it is somewhat ironic that their traditional drink, vodka, is so simple.

Vodka is distilled from wheat, rye or potatoes and is usually consumed neat (by itself, without ice or mixers). Often, however, dill cucumber or salted herring are used as chasers. I recommend a rye vodka, which is very smooth, but has just a hint of spice and citrus and will go nicely with the herring and cucumber.

During the Christmas season, German towns and villages are perhaps the most beautiful in the world. To warm your heart and your body, the Weinachtsmarkten (Christmas markets) sell the traditional Gluhwein (pronounced gloo-vine) from open-air stands.

This is one of my favorites, and for every three cups of wine you use, you'll need one cinnamon stick, six whole cloves, one cardamom pod, half of a lemon ring and two to four tablespoons of sugar. Heat over a low flame for 30 minutes to an hour, but do not let it boil.

For extra robustness, you can add schnapps, vodka or rum. If you do this, though, do not inhale while drinking or you'll gag on the alcohol fumes, as I've been unfortunate enough to discover.

Scandinavian winters are notoriously dark, and a fruity drink called Glogg helps keep the Christmas spirit warm and bright.

Though remarkably similar to Gluhwein, Glogg does differs slightly. Recipes tend to be larger, as we Scandinavians (at least my family) tend to drink a lot of it.

The best recipe I've found is at About.com, and I've included it for you.

These are only a few of the many holiday drinks available, and I hope you enjoy them all. Until next spring, I bid you all adieu, adios, aloha, arrivederci, auf weidersehen and goodbye.

How to Make Glogg

What you need:
- 2 bottles red wine
- 2 oz. Orange zest
- 2 cinnamon sticks
- 20 cardamom seeds
- 25 cloves
- 16 oz. blanched almonds
- 16 oz. Raisins
- 1 lb. Sugar cubes

What you do:
1. Bring wine to a boil.
2. Place all ingredients except raisins and almonds in a cheesecloth. Boil in wine for 15 minutes.
3. Add raisins, almonds, and rum.

CELEB NEWS

TV icon Dick Clark suffers mild stroke

"American Bandstand" icon Dick Clark was hospitalized this week after suffering a mild stroke.

Clark

Clark, who turned 75 on Nov. 30, suffered the stroke this week, publicist Paul Shefrin said Wednesday, declining to give any details. He would only say Clark had been hospitalized in the Los Angeles area.

The entertainer, who went from hosting "American Bandstand" to game shows and producing awards ceremonies, is scheduled to host ABC's "Dick Clark's Primetime New Year's Rockin' Eve 2005" and "Dick Clark's New Year's Rockin' Eve 2005" on Dec. 31 It will be his 33rd year welcoming in the new year.

"The doctors tell me I should be back in the swing of things before too long so I'm hopeful to be able to make it to Times Square to help lead the country in ringing in the new year once again," Clark said in a statement Wednesday.

Jay-Z named president of Def Jam Records

Jay-Z, whose professed retirement from his rap career, now has a new job to occupy his time — president of the Def Jam record label.

The appointment, rumored for months, was announced Wednesday by Antonio "L.A." Reid, the chairman of Island Def Jam Music Group.

The multi-platinum rapper — whose "The Black Album" was nominated for three Grammys on Tuesday — will take the helm on Jan. 3. He will also continue to run Roc-A-Fella records, which he co-founded with Damon Dash in 1995.

Def Jam, which owned 50 percent of Roc-A-Fella, also announced Wednesday that it had wholly purchased the rap label, whose acts include the 10-time Grammy nominee Kanye West, Cam'ron and the recently sentenced Beanie Sigel. Terms of that deal were not disclosed.

Spielberg loses 'extras' while filming

A crew that was filming scenes for Steven Spielberg's "War of the Worlds," based on H.G. Wells' novel about an invasion from outer space, lost a few extras in the Connecticut River last weekend.

Two adult-size mannequins got free and drifted south down the river during filming on the riverbank in Windsor, said Windsor police Lt. Shannon Haynes.

Despite a search by the movie production's water safety crew, the mannequins weren't recovered, and other police departments along the riverfront were alerted.

"We just wanted them to know that if they got any calls about bodies floating in the river," Haynes said Monday. "But we never heard anything about them being found."

DRINK OF THE WEEK

Vulcan Mind Probe

Courtesy of Fast Eddy's

- Mix equal parts vodka, rum, gin, tequila, amareto, triple sec, Canadian Mist, Segram 7.
- Fill rest of way with Orange Juice.
- Add a splash of grenadine.
- Serve on ice in a goblet with straw and a cherry.

"This drink will really sneak up on you. The juice and grenadine cover up the alcohol taste and give it a fruity taste, but it's really potent."

BASKETBALL | Ohlde watches Wildcats from bench

the idea of becoming a coach sometime in the future.

The time she is spending at K-State is helping her realize that goal.

"The (K-State) coaches are great," Ohlde said. "To be able to learn from them and maybe someday be able to take their coaching styles into my own, that's the greatest thing I can get out of a practice now. (Coaching) is something that I wouldn't mind doing."

As for now, Ohlde will sit at the end of the bench, watching her former team as it journeys through another season.

Ohlde said she has moved on from her days as a Wildcat, but a part of her wishes she could still be in uniform.

"I played with some of these girls for three years and it's tough seeing them out there on the court," she said.

"But it's something that I have to live with. I can't get a year back, so it's something that I have to deal with and move on with."

of the major team sports throughout the fall.

Polli has played both intramural sand and indoor volleyball for the last five years and said one game that stood out in her mind from this season was the first round of the postseason, when her team came from behind to win. "In the first round of playoffs, we came back and won three matches in a row after being down by two, and that was really exciting. Now, we want to keep winning and go to the championship," Polli said.

an .08 BAC (Blood Alcohol Content). Other drugs are different, because there's not that level."

However, advances are being made in drugged driving detection, Eichkorn said.

"Law enforcement officers are more able to detect marijuana and other drugs better," he said. "Now we have drug-recognition officers trained to know what drugs someone is on."

With a large amount of dollars being spent at the national level, questions arise whether ad campaigns actually influence the decision-making of the population and young people in particular.

Bocanegra said ad campaigns do have a positive impact in some respects.

"They're good in that they bring awareness to people who don't know the effects of drugs and alcohol," Bocanegra said.

The problem is those who need the information the most might not be listening, Bocanegra said.

"People who are using (drugs and alcohol) might not take it to heart, and that's the audience we really need to reach," she said.

In any case, Schoen said it should be common sense that a person would not be fine to drive after smoking marijuana.

"Anybody who thought about it reasonably would not get behind the wheel after getting high," Schoen said.

"They call it getting high for a reason. People who do that are generally irresponsible."

studies. She said her experience has been a good one.

"I had an apartment overlooking the Caribbean; it was to die for. But here, I had forgotten how easy it was to head to the grocery store and pick up whatever I needed," DiBartolo said.

Jay Humburg, clinical studies department chair at St. George University, said K-State has been helpful in welcoming the students and faculty from Grenada.

"It's been quite good. Good cooperation, a few hang-ups, but there's always a few things that don't work quite right," Humburg said.

Humburg said the worst part of being away from St. George University was the lack of surgery labs for his students as well as the K-State students.

The faculty lounge in the basement of Trotter Hall has been a makeshift office for the St. George faculty stationed at K-State. Humburg said he was happy to be accommodated.

For many of the students from Grenada, when they had to search for a place to live in Manhattan, that also meant a place for their animals.

DiBartolo has three cats and a bird and said she was lucky to have found someone to let her rent a place.

Kristin Erickson, first-year student in the College of Veterinary Medicine, rented out a room in her house to DiBartolo.

"I was happy to help out. It worked out both for the both of us. She found a place to live, and it helped to pay some of the bills," Erickson said.

Elisa Marusich, third-year veterinary medicine student from St. George, said the switch to afternoon classes for the past two months has been manageable.

"It's been crazy intense studying. It seems like we have tests every three days, but we've got to make up time missed," Marusich said.

DiBartolo said she is leaving after three finals next week and a final exam taken at the end of each year at St. George. She said that after the tests and a party, she will go back to Chicago before school starts again.

"It's been fun being here. Everyone has been so nice, places have been giving discounts, people let others live with them, and it's been a nice experience," DiBartolo said.

SOLDIERS | Fort Riley families could generate more school enrollment

However, the City Commission and the city's community planning department have addressed the concern by planning housing developments in northeast Manhattan for families with incomes from $90,000-$140,000 – about the level expected to meet needs of Fort Riley families.

But anticipating housing needs is not simple.

Traditionally, Skidmore said young, single soldiers tend to stay on base, while married soldiers and those with children tend to live in off-base communities.

Without knowing the age, family type and family size of soldiers, city officials cannot make specific plans for how to accommodate soldiers.

The military has not released demographic information about the incoming soldiers, but will release it when it becomes available, Skidmore said. Planning should not be a problem, thought because the soldiers will be arriving over a period of about 18 months.

"That will make it easier to accommodate them," she said.

BUSINESS

Despite concerns about housing, however, the arrival of the soldiers is expected to bring financial benefits to the community.

"It will be positive, no matter what," Hayen said.

Hayen said officials should be cautious, though, on whether to expect a large increase in tax revenue.

The city lost sales-tax revenue after the 1st Infantry Division left Fort Riley in 1995, Hayen said, but was able to compensate thanks to a healthy economy and finding a larger customer base.

But Butler said the Chamber of Commerce expects the local economy to improve after the soldiers arrive.

"We see it as a pretty major impact," Butler said. "Even if they don't live here, we expect them to spend some of their dollars in Manhattan.

"This is a very important economic opportunity for us."

SCHOOLS

While the business community waits to see what challenges and benefits the new deployments will bring, the local school district also has a lot riding on the new soldiers.

The Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board voted to close another elementary school after the 2005-06 school year – with the understanding new Fort Riley soldiers could provide enough enrollment to require the school to stay open.

School closings have been a contentious issue in the district since 2002, when the board voted to close two elementary schools.

"If Fort Riley achieves what we think it will, those students that come with those families will need spots during the next year," Randy Martin, school board member, said.

Martin said the school board decided it would be better to have to absorb the cost of keeping the school open an additional year rather than be faced with having to reopen a school if enrollment did increase because of Fort Riley's growth.

THE BIG RED ONE

The Army will not confirm nor deny rumors that the 1st Infantry Division could be returning to Fort Riley.

No decision has been made, Skidmore said.

The division, called the Big Red One for the bright red patch its soldiers wear on their shoulders, is stationed primarily in Germany.

Speculation began earlier this year when the Pentagon announced it would be cutting its overseas forces and bringing many soldiers home who are stationed abroad.

All domestic military bases are undergoing review this year, and the Base Realignment and Closure process will be completed next year.

It was during the 1995 BRAC process that the Big Red One was moved from Fort Riley.

THE WAR IN IRAQ

Fort Riley has about 1,100 soldiers deployed overseas, with plans to send another 3,000 in January.

The deployments negate some of the benefits that come with increased troop levels at Fort Riley, Skidmore said. Traditionally, if a soldier is planning to be deployed for a year or more, the soldier's family is likely to return to the hometown to be closer to family.

Butler, though, said chambers of commerce have seen a slowing of this trend, with more families staying near the military base during long deployments.

Whether or how this will affect communities around Fort Riley, Butler said, depends on how long the war lasts.

"World events exist that neither you nor I know how they will turn out," Butler said. "The future of world events, no one knows."

Tammi Killham, fire inspector with the Manhattan Fire Department, used to be the only female firefighter in Manhattan. Killham is one of the few women firefighters in the city, but she doesn't like to be thought of any differently because of gender.

Women, men become trailblazers in fields often dominated by one sex

Tammi Killham followed in her fathers' footsteps despite the stereotype that females don't become firefighters.

Killham is a fire inspector at the Manhattan Fire Department and previously worked as the only female firefighter in Manhattan.

"The job is very physically demanding, but I put that kind of pressure on myself to perform," Killham said.

While there are advantages to non-traditional careers for women, there may be hurdles to overcome, Killham said. She said balancing family with work is a struggle.

"At the fire department, we do 24-hour shifts. At such times, juggling family and career becomes quite a task. I love my job and I am never treated with any discriminatory behavior. I have got my promotions at the right times and the remuneration has always been commensurate to my rank. But sometimes being the only woman, I tend to get singled out."

After going into the Air Force, Scott Norris went to nursing school.

Grads will have to test after ceremony

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Commencement will be a little different this weekend.

One of the main differences is finals week follows commencement in the fall, whereas it is before the ceremony in the spring.

Gunile DeVault, associate registrar in the Registrar's Office, said the reason for the difference is because of scheduling.

"That's simply a calendar issue," she said.

Elizabeth Unger, vice provost of academic services and technology, said students want to leave right after finals in the fall.

"Most students leave immediately after their last final to get home to enjoy the holidays with family and friends," she said. "In the spring, we

Union preps for changes over break

The K-State Student Union will be undergoing changes during the semester break.

Jack Cannaughton, assistant director for the Union, said due to this year's shortened break, they cannot focus on larger changes as they have in the past.

"Last year, we made significant changes with restrooms and Union Station," he said.

"We plan on replacing the current burger restaurant with another place, to be named later. We are restricted on what we can serve customers, but next semester, we will work with Chartwells foods, giving us more flexibility."

Government agency issues new drinking water standards to boost security

By John Heilprin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – The Environmental Protection Agency issued new voluntary guidelines Thursday to secure drinking water and wastewater treatment plants against attack.

The guidelines for improving designs and operations were written by industry groups with EPA financing. The guidance urges improved water security designs and operations, and greater use of online monitoring to protect against the potential misuse of contaminants.

Benjamin Grumbles, the agency's top official for water issues, said "Americans should feel confident, when they turn on the tap, they have access to some of the cleanest, safest water in the world."

Pat Natale, executive director of the American Society of Civil Engineers, said water security must be among the country's highest priorities.

The EPA announced the guidelines along with the engineers' group, the American Water Works Association, for drinking water utilities, and the Water Environment Federation, for wastewater professionals.

"Why voluntary, you might ask? Well, frankly there are over 186,000 water infrastructure systems in the U.S. alone," Natale said. "They differ significantly in their size, their structure and their operations. Each utility must individually assess its own system for potential vulnerability. ... It is truly not a one size fits all solution."

But Erik Olson, a lawyer at the environmental group Natural Resources Defense Council, said industry had strongly objected to giving EPA more authority on water security.

"There's still no authority for federal officials to order a crackdown on security threats at drinking water and sewage plants," Olson said. "We're very concerned the security of the nation's water supplies is turned over to industry with minimal federal oversight."

The guidelines offer suggestions for thwarting attacks by improving the design, operation and physical security of drinking water and sewage treatment facilities.

That includes tips for designing an online system for detecting contaminants, where to put instruments and sensors and how to respond to suspicious incidents.

Other topics include risk assessment, threat analysis, financial and communications planning, human resources management, operating maintenance and emergency response strategy.

Jeanette Brown, who led an industry task force that developed the guidelines, said another danger from underground wastewater and storm water facilities is their possible use as "conduits for covert attacks on other infrastructure or sensitive locations at other buildings."

Brown is a water pollution official in Stamford, Conn.

BEST BETS

Your guide to this weekend's entertainment

1 | POMP AND CIRCUMSTANCE

It's been years of textbook purchases, late nights, countless lectures, dozens upon dozens of tests and hour upon hour of studying for the graduates donning their caps, gowns and tassels this weekend.

The December 2004 graduates will stand before crowds of family, friends and colleagues today and tomorrow as commencement ceremonies take place.

For a list of those dates and times for the various academic college commencements, be sure to read today's Collegian Graduation Guide.

2 | DIRTY DOZEN

If your graduating friend has a taste for cinema — or if you want to take in a movie before finals week — you can catch the latest flick from Oscar-winning director Steven Soderbergh.

The big stars — Brad Pitt, George Clooney, Matt Damon and new mom Julia Roberts — are back for this sequel to the 2001 remake of "Ocean's Eleven."

This time around, casino owner Terry Benedict (Andy Garcia) seeks payback for the fortune stolen in the first film.

Heist master Danny Ocean (Clooney) re-assembles his crew, plus a new thief, to pull off a series of heists abroad to pay off the amount desired by Benedict, lest they feel whatever wrath Benedict has in store for them.

The film, which is rated PG-13, opens in theaters nationwide today.

Courtesy art

3 | SHOP 'TIL YOU DROP

If you didn't dare brave the retail outlets the day after Thanksgiving, use this weekend to finish your holiday shopping and home decorations.

Chances are the stores won't be as packed. The deals might not be as good, but you'll enjoy a relatively calm and peaceful winter outing.

4 | HIT THE BOOKS

If you haven't been keeping track in your calendar or day planner, next week is prime time for final examinations. If you haven't begun studying for whatever tests you might have, now might be the time to get started.

If you end up spending a lot of time in the library, be sure to be courteous of all the other dutiful students studying. If you're lucky to not need to keep your nose in the books this week, try not to annoy any roommates and neighbors who might need to bone up on their studies.

One way or another, finish out the semester strong, have a memorable semester break and good luck with whatever the future months hold.

Smoking ban brings fines

Students express thoughts about ban in Lawrence

By Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Smoking will not come without a price after Lawrence city commissioners voted to ban smoking. The ban, which took effect July 1, prohibits smoking in all enclosed public places, according to the City of Lawrence's Web site, www.lawrenceks.org.

Violators could be subject to fines as high as $500.

"A task committee was appointed to study the subject of secondhand smoke." Debbie Van Saun, assistant city manager, said.

After a review, the committee brought its information to the commission, Van Saun said.

"It boiled down to the protection of the public health – the health of the employees of businesses in the community," she said.

According to documents from the Commission's Web site, the ban was implemented in order to improve and protect public health.

"It guarantees the right of non-smokers to breathe smoke-free air and recognizes the need to breathe smoke-free air has priority over the choice to smoke," according to the site.

K-State students have mixed feelings about the issue, although no like proposal has been introduced in Manhattan.

"I think it would be great; it would relieve a lot of the smell on campus, " said Corrie Ferrell, a sophomore in child development who does not smoke.

Danielle Admire, junior in family studies and human services, is a smoker, but she said such a ban wouldn't affect her because she doesn't smoke in public places.

"I would just have to smoke before I went to class," Admire said.

Smokers in Lawrence are allowed to smoke in private residences and motor vehicles. Other non-regulated areas include hotels, motels and outdoor places of employment, unless the owner of an entire establishment designated it as non-smoking.

The document also states that each business must clearly post a "No Smoking" sign or the national "No Smoking" symbol.

Employers are required to enforce the smoking policies with all its employees, according to the ban's stipulations.

Business owners or managers who violate the smoking ban are subject to a $100 to $500 fine, depending on the number of violations within a year.

Shiite parties issue list of 228 candidates for Jan. 30 Iraqi elections

By Mariam Fam
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Under the guidance of Iraq's most powerful Shiite cleric, Shiite parties presented a list Thursday of 228 candidates for next month's elections. Minority Sunni Arabs, who had been favored under Saddam Hussein, must now decide whether to join the race or renounce a vote that will help determine the country's future.

The announcement of the list of 23 parties, dubbed the United Iraqi Alliance, followed weeks of haggling. Members of participating groups said the coalition's platform would include a call for working toward the withdrawal of U.S. and other foreign troops in Iraq.

"There must be a timetable for this," said Hussein al-Mousawi, an official of the Shiite Political Council, an umbrella group that has some parties represented in the alliance.

The candidates list includes two powerful Shiite parties, as well as an array of independent Sunni tribal figures, Shiite Kurdish groups and members of smaller movements.

Importantly, the roster does not include the movement of radical Shiite cleric Muqtada al-Sadr, who appeared to be waiting to see whether the vote will be considered legitimate before he joins the political process. With violence roiling the country and key Sunni leaders demanding the Jan. 30 vote be put off, a credible election is by no means certain.

There were already signs that Sunni ranks were breaking: One group that had called for a delay, the Iraqi Islamic Party, quietly submitted a 275-candidate list Thursday.

Party officials said they wanted to reserve the right to take part in the vote if the election is not postponed.

In violence Thursday, seven Iraqis were killed in clashes in Baghdad and the volatile western city of Ramadi.

A car bomb also rocked a busy vegetable market in the northern city of Mosul, wounding two civilians, while a U.S. soldier was wounded by a roadside bomb in the capital.

Iraq's leading Shiite cleric, Ayatollah Ali al-Sistani, appointed the committee that set up the 228-candidate list. He has been working to unite Iraq's majority Shiites ahead of the vote to ensure victory, and include representatives from Iraq's other diverse communities. Shiites make up 60 percent of Iraq's nearly 26 million people.

The major Shiite political parties, the Supreme Council for the Islamic Revolution and the Islamic Dawa Party, were on the list. Both have strong links with Iran, a Shiite but non-Arab neighbor.

The 228 candidates also include independent Sunni Muslims, members of the Yazidis minority religious sect, and a Turkomen movement, among others.

Also listed are members of the Iraqi National Congress, led by former exile and one-time Pentagon favorite Ahmad Chalabi.

"I think that this list is a patriotic list. We hope that Iraqi people will back this list," said Sheik Fawaz al-Jarba, head of the powerful Sunni Shemar tribes in Mosul.

Ali al-Adeeb of the Islamic Dawa Party said members hoped that forming the alliance "was a step forward in the political process through its participation in the coming elections for a beloved and honorable Iraq that is free from any foreign influence and ... enjoys sovereignty."

New Year's Eve party in planning

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the second straight year, K-State students and Manhattan residents can watch a ball drop on New Year's Eve and not have to worry about Dick Clark bugging them.

The Little Apple ball drop, which will take place in Aggieville, offers fun for visitors of all ages, co-founder and organizer Kate Watson said.

"The whole idea of it is to just bring everyone together on New Year's Eve for a big party," Watson said.

She said the event's mantra, "New York, Eat Your Heart Out," speaks to the relation between the two Manhattan's influence on the celebration.

"We thought we'd have fun with it, because, of course, Manhattan is known as the Little Apple," Watson said.

Lyle Butler, chairman of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said the event provides a great service to the community.

"We think it's great," Butler said. "The more people we get in our community to stay at hotels, to shop, to eat at our local restaurants and the whole celebration activities, it's a good economic impact, and besides that, it's a lot of fun."

He said planners are expecting a larger crowd than last year's, which surprised organizers by it's size, because more people have heard about it and because K-State is not playing in a bowl game this year.

The event, which will be televised live on KSNT 27, is accompanied by shopping activities on New Year's Eve as well as a historic homes tour on New Year's Day, Watson said.

Butler said in addition to the Aggieville celebration, the Manhattan Arts Center on Poyntz Avenue will be having a party.

Collegian editors' letter to Santa Claus: Don't forget K-State this year

TO THE POINT

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Dear Santa,

Here is a small list of requests we would like you to grace upon K-State this holiday season, or at least by the end of next fiscal year:

Replace all the desks in Eisenhower Hall and use the old ones to have a bonfire on Bosco Student Plaza.
– Logan Adams

I want a Thunderdome. Step 1: Erect Thunderdome. If that's no good, I want a golf cart driven by Dean Bosco to drop me off at class (golf cart equipped with kegged beer is optional).
– J. Scott Bowman

Offer Roman and Greek history every single semester to get students fired up, and get the entire works of Michael Grant in stock at Hale Library.
– Christopher Harrop

This campus needs to promote more equality, as in squirrel and/or Labrador crossings on campus. (By the way, for everyone who saw the Labrador get run over by the evil Santa driving the black truck Thursday morning on Manhattan Avenue, he was treated and released from K-State Vet-Med.)
– Patrice R. Holderbach

Please help K-State invest in a working drainage system on rainy days, Santa. The pools of water in the sidewalks make my shoes cold.
– Kristi Hurla

A free and independent Collegian.
– Katie Lane

A dome over campus as well as an enclosed sidewalk leading straight to my apartment door so I can always travel in a climate-controlled bubble. I hate the cold.
– Sarah Rice

Is it really too much to ask for a Diet Coke around this campus?
– Loni Woolery

Can we get some urinal cakes in the Kedzie Hall men's bathroom? Fellas, you know what I'm talking about. I've never smelled something as bad. Ever. Hook us up.
– Josh Witt

Getting behind the mule

To establish a civil society, we must agree to disagree

LETA REPPERT

Among my family and friends, I sometimes am called "Balaam's ass" (ass, in this case, meaning "donkey"). This is because I once got into a conversation with a woman who believed that the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks were God's judgment on America.

I got in about a sentence and a half during the entire conversation, but she decided, based on that sentence and a half, that I am morally depraved and the equivalent of Balaam's ass, which is ironic, because – in the Bible story – what Balaam's ass says is true.

One of her friends even told me not to pray, because God wouldn't listen to me anyway – which is strange, considering we both are supposedly members of the same religion.

On the surface, they won the argument, since they got in the last word and most of the other ones, too. But if they wanted to change my mind, they couldn't have failed any more completely.

I don't think they would have convinced me no matter what they said, but I might have given their argument a little more respect if they had been willing to listen to what I had to say.

Most of us don't go around hurling Old Testament-based insults, but we often don't really listen to what other people are saying. Instead we rely on insults and characterizations, which usually aren't true. For example, I have a friend who spent the summer in France, and she didn't see a single cheese-eating surrender monkey.

There has been a lot of talk recently about how the election has divided the nation. In my opinion, the election is not what has caused division. Division has been caused by genuine differences of opinion, exacerbated by the name-calling and rhetoric both sides use.

What exactly do the labels "liberal" and "conservative" mean, anyway? I can assure you that "liberal" is not a synonym for "immoral" any more than "conservative" is a synonym for "rich, white male."

In the San Francisco Examiner, Kathleen Antrim quotes Maureen Dowd of The New York Times as writing, "We're entering another dark age, more creationist than cutting edge ... the Bushies cocoon in a scary, paranoid, regressive reality. Their new health care plan will probably be a return to leeches."

Hmm. Effective as this sentence may be in getting Ms. Dowd's point across, it would probably fit better in a creative writing class than a newspaper. Does anyone really think Bush's health care plan includes leeches? (Although I've heard that maggot therapy is coming back into vogue...)

As Ms. Antrim says in reply, "It's arrogant and intolerant to condescend to those who don't agree with you, and an insult to readers to distort facts to support such absurdity." I couldn't agree more.

The problem here is not just with one party; as Helen Vera of the Yale Daily News points out: "The problem lies on both sides of the fence; the left and the right alike need a liberal dose of good, old-fashioned manners."

Take another look at that sentence. What she says is that we need to apply a conservative value ("good, old-fashioned manners") in a "liberal dose." Maybe she has something there.

We aren't going to get anywhere in our arguments if we persist in believing that everyone who disagrees with us is unreasonable, immoral, or just plain stupid. Most of the time, people have perfectly good reasons for their beliefs; they might still be wrong, but failing to engage in meaningful discussions won't change anybody's mind.

On the other hand, if we all started to be civil to each other, we would miss out on a lot of good insults. And who wouldn't want to be known as Balaam's ass?

This will be Leta's final column, as she intends to spend all her free time next semester writing bad poetry while consuming tea and crumpets. Please send comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Semester break should be used to its utmost extent

ABBY HILES

I know this week was a busy time.

Let's be honest: dead week is a joke. Especially since I had two papers and a presentation due this week and had no "dead" time to speak of.

But the stress and carpal tunnel acquired during this most hectic of academic weeks will become all worth it in a short period of time. After all, it is only seven measly days until winter break.

Seven days until all I have to do is decide what pajama pants to don to Dara's for a soda, or what matinee to catch down at Seth Child.

With that in mind, I thought I would give you a list of some suggestions of what to do with your glorious three and a half weeks between semesters. They are your three weeks; make them count.

1) MOVIE MARATHON

I know what you are thinking: is she a complete geek? Maybe. But more importantly, the extended edition of "The Return of the King" will be available on DVD soon. So for me, that means getting some serious snackable items, locking the door and subjecting myself and my roommate to more than 14 hours of "Lord of the Rings" cinema – Pizza Shuttle and potty breaks optional.

2) SCHOOL SUPPLY SHOPPING

I just so happen to be a complete nerd for school supplies. The mere mention of taking a walk through the office supply section of Wal-Mart gives me goose bumps. And Staples? Forget about it. That place is one Post-It away from being my Mecca.

A new semester is coming up and do you really want to be the only kid in class without nifty new highlighters? I didn't think so. So plan a trip to your own favorite office supply outlet and grab some new do-dads, a new semester approaches.

3) ANNUAL CLOSET CLEAN-OUT

After a very rich and prosperous Christmas or Hanukkah season, it is time to take the plunge and purge your closets of any unnecessary wardrobe pieces.

This should be done every couple of months, but if you haven't taken a dive into the pile of laundry at the bottom of your closet, perhaps now is the time. Things to keep in mind: K-State gear never goes out of style, your high school prom T-shirt has seen better days, and no one will ever have to know your affliction for holiday sweaters if trash them.

4) START YOUR SCHOOL READING... NOW

Who am I kidding? This is just a suggestion for those of you who want to do something meaningful. Getting a head start on the next semester is a good idea for all, but probably isn't something that will be occurring in my apartment, although the reading list for Harry Potter's Library is one I could handle.

Whatever you decide to do with your three and a half weeks, make sure and make them worth it.

After all, it was a long semester, and you deserve to waste time listening to records you are ashamed to own, and to dance around your apartment in your skivvies. You worked hard this semester, keep that in mind.

For those of you who didn't? Well, you are in the same boat as me.

But don't think that is stopping me from watching Aragorn be crowned king labeling my new notebooks and saying goodbye to my less than desirable fashion choices of the last year.

Abby is planning on winning the lottery this Saturday and quitting school to lead the lavish lifestyle she deserves. You can reach her at see-you-next-semester@ksu.edu.

Hey, Altaf Karim, my religion never taught me to look down at other religions, by calling itself "supreme and ultimate."

How come Moore has its own forum? Why don't the rest of the halls? I think we should have a Westom.

It's been two months, and still we miss you. Here's to my favorite opinion editor.

It's a good thing FarmHouse spent their whole social budget to TP ADPi.

It's not volcanic activity; that's where they keep the crazy train during the off-season.

The only good squirrel is a dead squirrel.

With all this TP floating around, I feel like I'm back in high school.

Coach Fritz: Thank you and the team for a great year of volleyball. Can't wait till next year. See you soon. Love, the students.

To the guy who was complaining about people calling into the Fourum: Do you know that you are whining about people that whine? So take a second and stop whining about whiners that whine in the Fourum.

My 5-year-old nephew just answered the phone by saying, "Hamburger Helper, what's your beef?"

Hey, Collegian sports staff: Learn what real sports journalism is and watch "Purple Power Hour" tonight.

Hannukah is so Jewish.

To the person who wrote "I'm fat" on the side of my car in permanent marker: I saw you.

A girl just called into "Loveline," and they named her a "Loveline" success; and she called from Kansas State University, and she graduates in three days. One big congratulations to you.

More than 200 rolls of toilet paper were stolen from the custodial closets on campus, and it's interesting that there's a lot of TPing going on here. Coincidence? I think not.

To whoever wrote in the joke from Mitch Hedberg: You have no creativity. Come up with your own jokes, you jerk!

Actually, nothing says "witch" like sitting in a coffee shop on a Sunday night and talking about witchcraft.

Props to the women's studies professor double-dutching outside Leasure.

I got here at 7:30 this morning, and it's 5:45, and I'm just leaving, so I reserve the right to use my car as a locker.

It's pathetic that I'm gonna have to take out a student loan to pay for all my parking tickets this semester.

TO THE EDITOR

Family gives its thanks to community

Editor,

We would like to express our deepest gratitude to the students and faculty at Kansas State University. We can't thank you enough for the kind words, flowers, visits, food and other kind deeds you have given us.

We have enjoyed getting to know you through this tragic event and have been blessed by each of you. Barb was truly the luckiest girl ever, thanks to the friendships she developed as a student here. It was a great joy to watch her bloom as you have mentored and encouraged her.

We have found many personal notes written to Barb; she took them all to heart. We treasure the many stories and memories that you have shared with us. We would specifically like to thank the Collegian staff, who gave her a place to make a difference under the leadership of Linda Puntney and Patrice Holderbach.

One of the biggest gifts we have is the column she wrote about moms.

We appreciate everyone who helped us celebrate Barb's life. Please stay in touch; you are welcome at any time.

Editorial lacks perspective

Editor,

Your Dec. 7 editorial advocating a Friday "stop day" prior to finals week left out some important facts and misrepresented others.

The No. 1 omitted fact is that the State Board of Regents requires a certain number of instructional days per semester. Thus, subtracting days from the end of the semester requires days to be added to the beginning of the semester (i.e. August) and often results in having classes start mid-week rather than on a Monday.

This has multiple costs.

The mid-week start might mean that a student has to quit a summer job a week early, with the accompanying loss of wages.

Earlier starts mean that professors, most of whom are only paid for nine months of the year, have to get here earlier to get ready for classes. They are not paid for that time, but they still need to be here. It can also shorten the time that professors need to do research in the summer.

So these are all costs that were not mentioned in your editorial, but need to be considered.

The misinterpretation is the statement that "once-a-week classes are unaffected" by a Friday stop day.

Both once-a-week and twice-a-week classes that have multiple sections are severely affected, in reality.

Let me break this down for you. If a lab class (e.g. Biology 198) that meets twice a week (e.g. Wednesday/Friday or Tuesday/Thursday cannot meet on Friday, that means that students in the Thursday sections also will not be able to meet, since all sections need to have the same number of instructional days.

There are 30 class days for a 15-week semester in classes that meet twice a week. A Friday drop day eliminates 1/30 of the semester. If a lab class only meets once a week, the loss of a Friday class means that no classes can be held any other day that week. A Friday drop day eliminates 1/15 of the semester in this case. That is hardly what I would call "unaffected."

It is ironic that in a time when tuition is escalating, the KSU student newspaper is advocating steps to reduce the amount of education that can be obtained for those tuition dollars.

Advocating mid-term teaching evaluations (Dec. 6 editorial) also has the same effect. Class time that is used for completing survey forms cannot be used for instruction.

I hope I live to see the day when KSU students appreciate their educational opportunities a bit more and are not constantly striving to get less education for their increased tuition.

Sincerely,

David A. Rintoul
ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR, BIOLOGY DIVISION

PERSPECTIVES

Stop-loss enlistment needs cut-off

DAILY ILLINI
U. ILLINOIS

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. – Three days after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, President Bush signed an executive order authorizing the military to extend enlistments beyond their normal lengths. This "stop-loss" program was meant to promote continuity and cohesiveness during war or national emergency. Recently, it was invoked to extend the tours of U.S. soldiers in Iraq.

Now, eight U.S. soldiers from different sections of the Army have filed a lawsuit against the government, claiming that each of them has been prevented from coming home from Iraq, despite serving long after their enlistments were supposed to end.

The war on terrorism and the occupation of Iraq and Afghanistan have severely stretched the resources of our military. Short of instituting a draft, the stop-loss policy is probably one of the only practical ways to maintain a sizable force. But while the government is within its legal rights to enact emergency policies in order to keep its soldiers, we feel that any future recruitment should make individuals well-aware of the stop-loss policy. After all, according to Jules Lobel, a lawyer for one of the eight soldiers, nothing in their enlistment contract specifically mentioned a stop-loss policy.

Serving in the military is a commitment that shouldn't be taken lightly. The government owes its soldiers an up-front explanation about their service.

Although the Army says the fine print on every contract mentions the possibility that the time of service might change, this isn't good enough.

The Sept. 11. attacks drastically changed the nature of our military policy. Today, we find ourselves fighting wars that involve long occupations. Recruiters should guarantee that no future recruit ever complains of a "bait and switch."

Furthermore, broad actions like the stop-loss policy hurt the reputation of the military. Potential recruits might find it difficult to enlist if they don't know when they will come back.

President Bush declared an end to "major combat operations in Iraq" on May 2, 2003. But almost a year and a half later, we are increasing the number of troops in Iraq to 150,000 – a new record. At any given time, more than 7,000 soldiers are affected by the stop-loss policy, and the influx of new troops will extend the tours of more than 8,000 soldiers by two months.

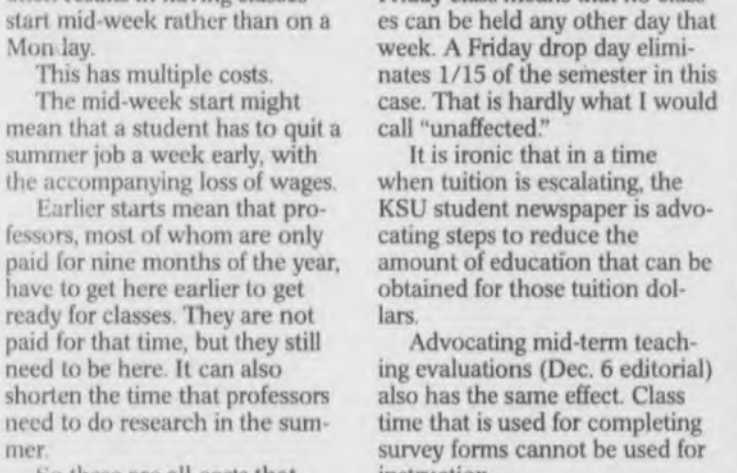
These are men and women who are willing to put their life on the line for our country. We have an obligation and a duty to tell them how long they will be expected to serve.

Congress should regulate MLB drug testing

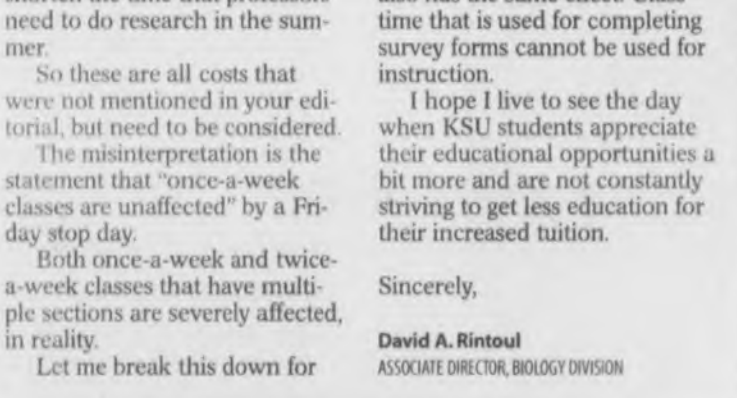
INDIANA DAILY STUDENT
INDIANA U.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. – The cat's out of the bag. New York Yankee Jason Giambi, slugger Barry Bonds and Olympic medal-winner Marion Jones took steroids. And who knows how many others are out there?

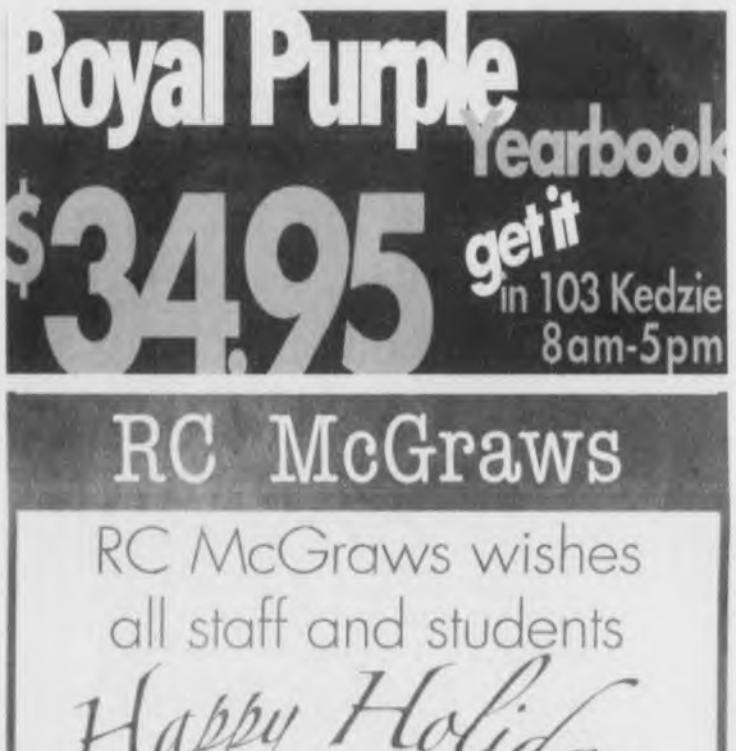
We are not attempting to condone or condemn steroid usage. Instead, the debate that catches our attention concerns the federal government's interference with the issue: Should baseball clean up its own act, or will Sen. John McCain have to put money where his mouth is very soon?



Any American would be skeptical about the federal government regulating a private industry, especially a journalist. But we think this is one area where the government should step in.



Saving the morals and image of America's greatest pastime is, of course, the best reason for government intervention. But another substantial, more relevant reason the government should impose steroid standards on baseball (and other sports) is it significantly decreases the possibility of a strike. Baseball has the strongest players' union in professional sports, which has allowed them to weasel their way out of high standards in the past.



Theoretically, the players' union could go on strike from the government, but they wouldn't gain anything from it. Bud Selig knows this.

Finally, the strength of a bat won't be in question anymore, and the game can return to normalcy.

Hopefully, all athletes will, too.

Cats visit Wyoming on Saturday

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An unblemished record and the men's basketball team's best start in seven years will be on the line at 9 p.m. Saturday, as the Cats face Wyoming in the team's first road game of the season.

Following a 76-69 win over Oakland Monday night that bumped K-State's record to 5-0 – the program's best start since the 1997-98 season – several Cats said the team was progressing well so far.

"We're starting to gel, the team's starting to gel," junior forward Marques Hayden said. "People are starting to realize what their roles are on the team. What happens in college basketball is you start to have fun, and the plays come a little bit easier and everybody's getting a piece of the ball.

"It's just about sharing the love."

Indeed, "the love" was shared in the Wildcats' victory over Oakland, which saw the team come back from a 15-point first half deficit.

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey led K-State with 24 points and 15 rebounds, but four other Wildcats also scored eight or more points. Coach Jim Wooldridge got season-highs in scoring from forward Cartier Martin and Hayden, with 15 points apiece.

Martin agreed the team was coming together after its fourth win this season by less than 10 points.

"The bond is getting a little bit tighter now," Martin said. "Everybody's recognizing their roles, and everybody's doing what they're supposed to do."

Though the Wildcats say team chemistry is at a high, it will receive a test against the Cowboys (4-2).

K-State was just 2-9 on the road last season, losing all three non-conference games on the road.

In hopes of improving their road play, along with getting in added practice time and game experience, the Wildcats participated in four October exhibition games in Canada.

Wooldridge said the foreign exhibition tour will hopefully benefit the team as it travels to Casper, Wyo., and that he will use the games in Canada as a coaching tool.

"I think we can use it as a reference point to remind players what it was like up there and that we're going to another level of play now," Wooldridge said.

Athletics need appreciation from fans

JOSH WITT

Missed classes, forgotten homework and failed tests.

Minimal sleep and a daily diet consisting of Mountain Dew, Marlboro Lights, Arby's and Budweiser.

This was my past semester as sports editor at the Collegian.

Good times.

My grades and a reasonably healthy lifestyle – if I ever had one – took a backseat to K-State sports this semester.

I learned quite a few things, but my biggest discovery was somewhat disturbing.

I don't know if we truly appreciate our athletes and coaches.

We seem to expect the world of them.

When the K-State football team struggled this season, the majority of this campus and community acted like it was the end of the world.

"How can these guys lose to Kansas? How can they not make a bowl game?" we asked, like Coach Bill Snyder and the Wildcats are required to be successful every season.

They aren't required to do anything.

All they owe this university is to represent it with pride, and I believe they did.

So our football team had a rough year. Sit back and think about it. This team made a bowl game 11 straight years. The Wildcats brought home a Big 12 Championship last year.

They should be afforded a down year every once in awhile. No program can be perfect.

But here we were, some of us talking about how the team hurt our college lives somehow by not being that good this year. It's really quite ridiculous when you think about.

Athletics provides us with so much, we should start appreciating them more.

In a world where everybody seems to be at each other's throats more and more, politics is as nasty as its ever been, and everybody takes life more and more seriously, sports gives us a release from all of that.

Even with the steroids scandal, the Ron Artest incident and all the things wrong with sports, in the end it provides us all an escape.

I know, I can't picture a world without them.

Though there were more losses than wins this season, there were many times in the press box or on the sideline when I thought to myself, "it doesn't get any better than this."

As I watched Darren Sproles make another phenomenal run, saw Dylan Meier fight through injury to lead the team on a touchdown drive and witnessed special teams nut Marcus Perry demolish an opposing player, any crap that was in my life took a backseat.

It was a beautiful thing.

Now, with basketball season kicking into gear, I've found myself feeling the same way.

The men's game against Oakland was a great example.

The energy in Bramlage Coliseum was incredible, as the Wildcats came back to take the victory.

Nothing beats a college basketball game where the student section is going nuts, and the home team is busting its tail to win the game.

Centennial track season begins for K-State today

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The track and field team kicks off its 100th season today, starting the indoor season today with the Carol Robinson Winter Pentathlon at Ahearn Field House.

The Wildcats are then set to compete again at 10 a.m. Saturday with the KSU All-Comers at Ahearn as well.

Last season, the Wildcat men placed second in the Big 12 Conference for the indoor season and the women placed third.

Coach Cliff Rovelto said he expects an equally successful year in 2004-05.

"The men have potential to be a very strong indoor team," Rovelto said. "We were second in the conference last year and can be probably every bit as good if not better. We're also strong on the women's side. There's two other teams in Nebraska and Texas that will be strong, and we may be better and still be third."

Rovelto said due to the early timing of the meet, some athletes – including the distance runners coming off cross country season – would not compete. He also said the meet, which will not have team scores, will serve as a gauge for an athlete's performance at the start of the season.

"We aren't now, nor should we be, where we want to be three months from now," Rovelto said.

"We're limiting them significantly. We're just looking for them to do what they're supposed to do at this point in time."

The meet on Saturday is an open competition that includes Kansas, Emporia State, UMKC, Oklahoma Baptist and Oklahoma State's women among others.

K-State returns four All-American performers from last year's indoor season.

Senior Chaytan Hill earned the honor for her second-place finish in women's triple jump at the 2004 NCAA Championships, with a leap 44 feet, 8.25 inches. Senior Joseph Lee placed fifth in the men's 800-meter run with a time of 1 minute, 48.46 seconds in the 2003 championship meet.

Sophomores Christian Smith and Kyle Lancaster earned All-American status at last year's Championships, with Smith taking second in the men's 800-meter run with a time of 1 minute, 48.18 seconds and Lancaster placing third in men's high jump, clearing 7 ft, 2.5 in.

Rovelto said many great athletes have went through the program.

"The tradition is a pretty bright one," Rovelto said. "There have been a number of Olympians, Olympic medalists and NCAA champions. There's a lot of significant athletes that have been a part of our program."

Rovelto said despite individual success, the Wildcats are still seeking solid team performances each year.

"From a team perspective, teams have been successful but not what we aspire for it to be," he said. "To be consistently in the top three in a conference like the Big 12, to do that over a long period of time, is very difficult to do. It's our aspiration to improve on that."

Football | Holmes out for remainder of the season

Priest Holmes, who was leading the NFL in scoring and rushing when he injured his knee in early November, was placed on injured reserve Thursday and will miss the rest of the season.

Holmes

The Kansas City Chiefs indicated Wednesday they would probably finish the year without their star running back, whose recovery from sprained knee ligaments has gone much more slowly than the team had hoped.

Holmes was injured on what appeared to be a routine tackle at Tampa Bay on Nov. 7.

NBA | Arbitrator hears players' testimony

An arbitrator heard six hours of testimony Thursday in a grievance hearing that the NBA refused to attend about the Pacers-Pistons brawl-related suspensions issued by commissioner David Stern.

Artest

Arbitrator Roger Kaplan indicated he would not issue a ruling for at least a week.

The players' union asked for a specific reduction in the suspensions for Pacers Ron Artest, Stephen Jackson, Jermaine O'Neal and Anthony Johnson, though union officials would not specify what penalties they suggested.

Each of the players testified for at least half an hour, and two other people — O'Neal's security agent and a union attorney — also were called as witnesses.

The NBA declined to participate, contending that Stern has sole authority over on-court discipline and that the arbitrator has no jurisdiction to hear the case.

Basketball | Ohio State hoops team sanctions itself

Ohio State imposed a one-year ban on postseason play by its men's basketball team in response to $6,000 the university said former coach Jim O'Brien gave a recruit who never played for the school.

O'Brien's firing in June also was part of the sanctions by the university.

The ban includes NIT and NCAA competition after this season.

University officials said they expect more self-imposed sanctions as the NCAA investigates.

O'Brien was fired after Geiger said the coach admitted paying the money to the recruit. O'Brien has sued the university, claiming he is owed at least $3.4 million because his firing violated terms of his contract.

MLB | Diamondbacks sign Glaus to a four-year deal

The Arizona Diamondbacks move quickly to get a right-handed power hitter with their first free-agent signing in what they promise will be a busy offseason.

Glaus

All-Star third baseman Troy Glaus agreed Thursday to a four-year, $45 million contract with the Diamondbacks, who hope the 2002 World Series MVP will rebound from a shoulder injury that slowed him the past two seasons.

The deal includes a signing bonu of $4 million and annual salaries of $8 million, $9 million, $10.5 million and $12.5 million. The contract also provid Glaus a hotel suite on road trips and u to $250,000 reimbursement per year f personal business expenses.

Glaus is supposed to fill the void left by Richie Sexson, who almost certainly won't re-sign with Arizona.

Glaus, 28, hit .284 with an American League-leading 47 home ru in 2000, followed by 41 homers in 20(and 30 in the Angels' World Series championship season of 2002. In Anaheim's seven-game World Series triumph over San Francisco, he hit .38 with three home runs and eight RBIs.

The three-time All-Star played in only 91 games in 2003 because of the shoulder problems, then appeared in 7 last season before arthroscopic surger

Glaus returned in late August, an hit seven of his 18 home runs in the final month of the season to help the Angels to the division title.

The coffee-house scene can be found Thursday nights in Union Station.

In its second semester, Thursday Night Buzz brought a variety of events every week.

Ben Hopper, programming director of the Union Programming Council, said the weekly events were well received.

"It went well," Hopper said. "We had a very diverse line-up of performances and activities."

Next semester, though, the Buzz will be every two weeks, starting Jan. 27, Hopper said.

Part of the reason for the change is to have funds to bring more famous recording artists from across the nation to the event, he said. Next semester's focus will be on live music.

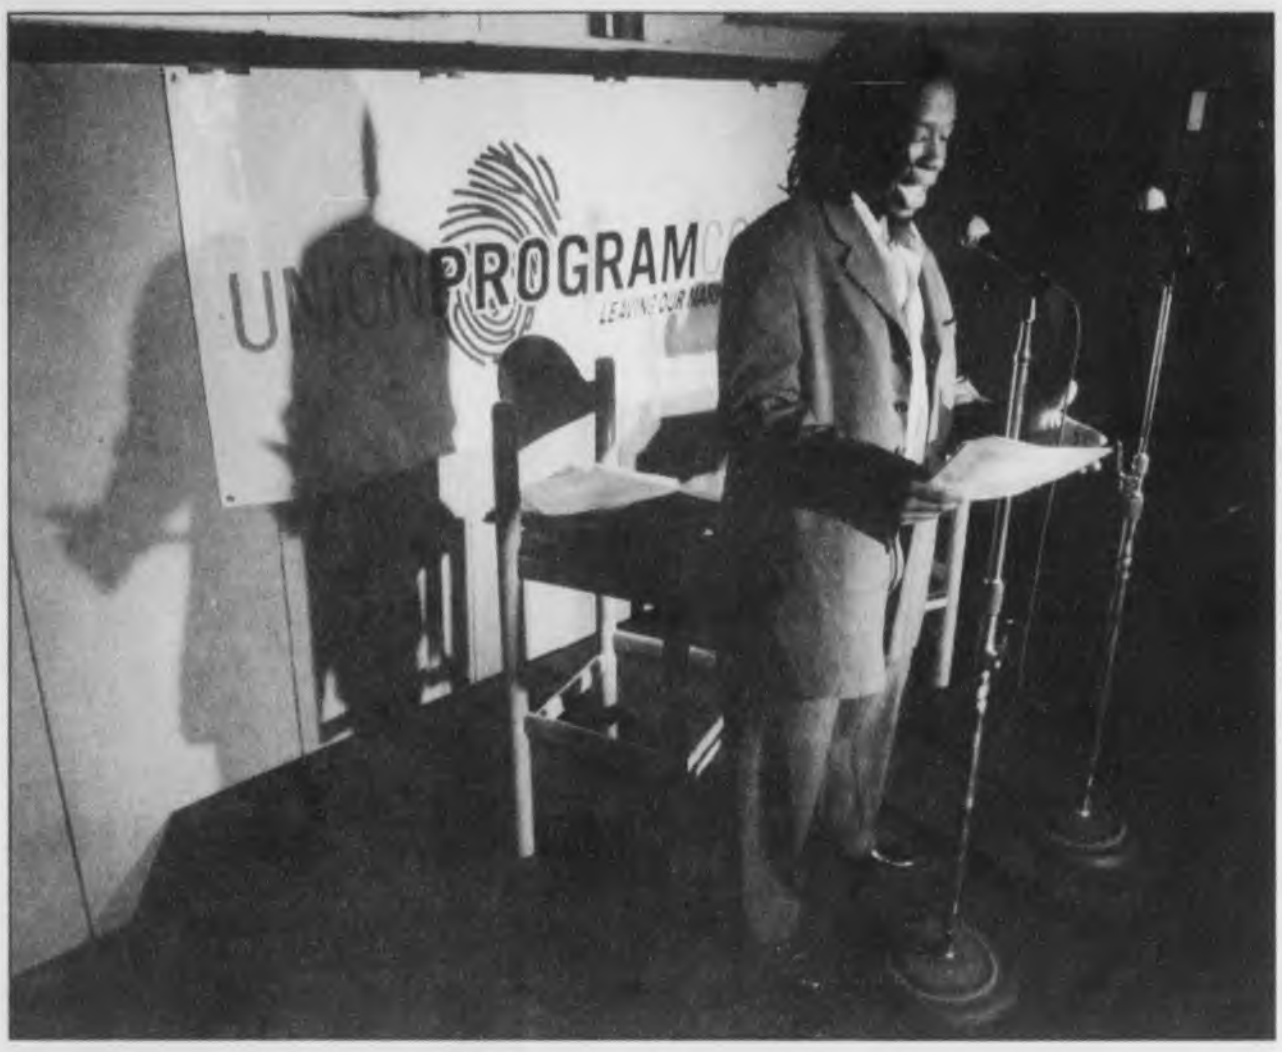
"Right now it's going to be live music, that coffee-house music," Hopper said. "That's what we're trying to get."

Free coffee and treats will be provided next semester, as they have been since the beginning of the program, he said. The time for it will be moved to 8 p.m., instead of 7 p.m. this semester.

"Hopefully we'll get a larger audience," he said. "We want more students to be aware of Thursday Night Buzz."

Oppress Makhafula, co-chair of the art committee for Thursday Night Buzz, said there was about an average of 40 students in attendance every night.

He said there were evaluations conducted after each Buzz night to determine which types performances and activities students preferred.



"They (students) favor some activities more than others," Makhafula, graduate student in physics, said. "These evaluations will help us in the future which programs to include."

Although there will be famous names performing at Thursday Night Buzz, students will still be allowed to participate, he said.

"We allow our students to show their capabilities," Makhafula said. "We allow students to give it a shot if they want."

Diversity in programs will still be important for next semester, he said.

"We try to have diverse activities and reach all the students," Makhafula said.

Love is on the mind, lips of one not-so-naughty nor nice columnist

LACEY STORER

With Christmas break fast approaching, I'm doing what most students faced with final exams and papers are doing: procrastinating.

Instead of doing homework, I've decided that writing my letter to Santa would be a better use of my time. So, here it goes...

Dear Santa,

Although it is questionable how good I have been this year, I still think I deserve a visit from you this Christmas. My list isn't long, I promise, but it is quite specific.

I would ask you for all A's on my finals, but I think my professors are the ones in charge of that. I really want the "Sex and the City" trivia game, but my mom has that covered.

So, Santa, I'm asking you for the one thing I want that only you can give me with your magical Christmas ways.

Santa, I want a man. It's been a while since I've had a boyfriend, and I think it's high time I had some regular male companionship.

But I do have a few qualifications that my present must have. Please keep them in mind when you are choosing him.

First of all, I'd like him to be smart. I don't need a "Jeopardy"-winning genius, but I do want a guy who values education and intelligence. Someone who keeps up somewhat on current issues and affairs and can carry on an intelligent conversation for more than five minutes.

And if you can manage, I would prefer a guy that shares my love of reading for fun.

Speaking of fun, I want a guy who knows how to have fun.

Someone who doesn't just sit on his couch playing video games and watching "SportsCenter" all the time. I know, these are as vital to guys as air and beer, and I don't mind the normal amount. But I do want someone who will leave the house regularly to go to movies or take random roadtrips. Someone spontaneous who can keep me entertained.

I also want a guy who is funny. A good sense of humor is a must, and even better if it's the same quirky one as mine. I would love a guy who will watch standup comedians with me on Comedy Central and, most importantly, a guy who can make me laugh.

One important thing is that he knows how to be a gentleman and a good boyfriend. I want a guy who will open doors and hold out my coat for me. A guy who doesn't mind paying for my meals (don't worry, sometimes dinner will be on me).

I'd like someone who isn't afraid to show his emotions, hide his affections or feels the need to play games. Someone who will call me when he says he will, tells me I'm beautiful and rarely makes me cry.

When you are selecting Mr. Wonderful and his dazzling personality, can you please make sure that he gets along with my friends as well. It sucks having a boyfriend your friends don't like. You're ending up having to choose between the two all the time, and I'd rather not have to. I'd love a guy who can hang out with my friends and easily fit into my group.

Well, Santa, I think I've given you enough to start with, I want to leave a little mystery for Christmas. As far as looks, I'm not too particular about hair and eye color, but I have a soft spot for dark hair and green eyes. Nice abs would be good, too.

If you're too busy to deliver him on Christmas, New Year's Eve will be fine. I can't wait for my present, I know you'll do good. Oh, and I hope leftover Gumby's and a can of Miller Lite is OK instead of milk and cookies. It's all we have at my house.

Thanks, and Merry Christmas!

CELEB NEWS

Damageplan, Pantera guitarist 'Dimebag' slain

"Dimebag" Darrell Abbott, who was known for his frantic guitar riffs for Pantera and Damageplan, was fatally shot during a performance last night. He was 38.

Abbott was shot to death as he took stage with Damageplan and began to play the first song of the concert at the Alrosa Villa nightclub in Columbus, Ohio.

Three other people were fatally shot before a police officer killed the gunman.

The deaths shook the heavy metal music industry as colleagues reeled from the news and fans flooded Web sites to share their grief.

"This is insane and this is beyond travesty," Killswitch Engage frontman and former Damageplan tour partner Howard Jones told MTV. "This is beyond anything I've ever heard. This shouldn't happen in or outside of the rock and metal community. He will be missed and mourned as a person, as a musician and as a friend."

Usher dominates the Billboard Awards

The R&B impresario, Usher, dominated the 2004 Billboard Music Awards on Wednesday night, picking up 11 awards in the latest in a string of accolades he has earned this year.

His awards included artist of the year, R&B/hip-hop album of the year for "Confessions" and Hot 100 single of the year for "Yeah!" featuring Lil Jon and Ludacris.

R&B crooner Alicia Keys picked up seven awards during Wednesday's show, which was held at the MGM Grand hotel-casino.

Kanye West, who has a leading 10 Grammy nominations, picked up four Billboard awards, including rap artist of the year. 50 Cent won a new award, ringtone of the year, for "In Da Club."

UMKC away game awaits Cats

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"I think it's a tremendous opportunity for us to take the floor and establish that we're going to move the basketball well as a team, that we're going to defend well as a team, that we're going to rebound the ball well as a team and get back to the fundamental aspects of the things that make us a good basketball team."

Deb Patterson
WOMEN'S BASKETBALL COACH

When No. 25 K-State travels Saturday to Municipal Auditorium to play UMKC in Kansas City, it will be a homecoming of sorts for several Wildcat players.

Sophomore Claire Coggins and freshmen Shana Wheeler and Carolyn McCullough all played high school basketball in the Kansas City area prior to becoming Wildcats.

"I'm going to have a lot of family and friends that are going to be at the game," Wheeler said. "It's going to be exciting. It's going to be the first time for them seeing me play in a college game."

Coach Deb Patterson said it will be a special game for the players from the Kansas City area.

"There's a lot of personal pride involved for everyone that takes the floor – people playing in front of their family and friends and old high school opponents and old high school teammates," she said.

For K-State (4-2), the game against UMKC (2-5) offers a chance to rebound from the stunning 77-56 loss to Liberty last week.

Patterson said she looks to hit home the idea of playing as a team and focusing on what her players need to do to get better when they take on the Kangaroos.

"I think it's a tremendous opportunity for us to take the floor and establish that we're going to move the basketball well as a team, that we're going to defend well as a team, that we're going to rebound the ball well as a team and get back to the fundamental aspects of the things that make us a good basketball team," Patterson said.

With All-American senior forward Kendra Wecker out with an ankle injury, the Wildcats face the reality of playing without their star for at least another week.

McCullough said the team is prepared to play with or without Wecker in the lineup.

"A team is more than one person," McCullough said. "Everyone else is really rallying together. We can't wait to get (Wecker) back, but yet we're also ready to step up in her place."

The Kangaroos feature UMKC's all-time leading scorer in senior guard Katie Houlehan.

Houlehan is coming into the contest averaging 20.1 points per game, including a 26-point outing in a 68-58 loss to Tulsa on Tuesday.

Patterson said the Wildcats are hoping to shut down Houlehan, but also play solid defense across the board.

"(Houlehan) is a tremendous talent," Patterson said. "She finds ways to score and impact the game, depending on the nature of the opponent and what her team needs. We'll have a real preoccupation with Katie, certainly, and the strengths that she brings to the floor, but also a real preoccupation with playing team defense."

McCullough said the Wildcats are only worried about getting better as a team.

"There's the rankings and everything, that a lot outsiders care about," she said. "But that's not what we care about. We care about each day, getting better. Each day, communicating better with each other. As long as we're doing those things, in the end, when stuff is on the line, we're going to get it done."

COLUMN | Men's basketball team needs fan help

I hope we fully appreciate the luxury we have to witness it all in person.

But I wonder.

I wonder, because we have an undefeated team and yet there has been a ridiculous amount of empty seats in Bramlage. The student section has been solid, and those who show up are crazy, but more could come.

As one of my friends, who's also a sports writer says, "What else do you have to do in Manhattan?"

And the community, where are you at? The empty seats behind us in the non-student, season ticket holder section were inexcusable.

The men's basketball team needs support. The women's team needs continued support. The football team needs to have the same following it always has. Every sport on this campus deserves continued appreciation.

This doesn't mean you can't be critical. If a player isn't giving full effort on the playing field, we have the right to get on his or her case. But if you've been a K-State fan through the good times, you should be just as much of a fan – if not more – through the not so good times.

In ending the semester, this is all I ask.

See you all in January.

Josh is now no longer the supreme leader of the sports desk. Michael Ashford is taking the reigns next semester, but Josh will still be writing. You can't shake him that easy. You can e-mail him at sports@spub.ksu.edu.

CAREER | Fire inspector follows in father's footsteps

as only about six percent of nurses today are male.

Norris, a nurse at Mercy Regional Health Center, said the Air Force was largely male dominated, and the switch to nursing was an overwhelming shift.

"But my job is fun. A good sense of humor always helps. Patients are often surprised to see me but relate to me very well. I have a very good repertoire with my colleagues. With my two diverse careers, I have come to understand people better," Norris said.

Careers in carpentry, welding and mechanics are on the U.S. Department of Labor's list of non-traditional occupations for women.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, women comprise less than 25 percent of the labor force in these jobs.

According to the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labor, average annual earnings for women were 72.2 percent of men's annual earnings. This disparity in earnings can be attributed, in part, to the different occupations in which men and women are employed. Non-traditional jobs for women are often considered better paying, because they are in high-growth fields and the prevailing union wages are applicable.

Research shows that women in traditionally male-dominated fields, such as engineering and finance, face a difficult task. If they succeed, their co-workers, both male and female, may unfairly see them as unsociable and difficult to work with.

Tammi Killham, fire inspector at the Manhattan Fire Department, dribbles a basketball while playing with another firefighter Thursday. Killham spent most of the day working in the field and preparing for a day when she is called to duty.

In this context, Angela Hubler, associate professor at the department of women's studies said there have been discrimination cases.

"Two women firefighters with the Kansas City Fire Department were seeking justice on claims of discrimination for not providing women adequate firefighting protective gear and sanitary facilities. Sexual harassment, physical violence and discrimination are quite a commonplace in professions like firefighting, construction works etc."

But things are seeing the light of the day. In recent decades, the biggest alteration in the American occupational fabric has been the increasing representation of women in the managerial, administrative and professional ranks.

Since 1985, the percentage of women who are managers or professionals has increased from 24 percent to 32 percent, according to the bureau.

But there are still occupational categories where women or men are heavily concentrated. For example, nearly one in four working women are in administrative support positions (professional specialists, nurses, and teachers), compared with about one in 20 men.

Nearly 20 percent of the men are precision production workers (mechanics, repairers, and those in construction trades), compared with one in 50 working women.

A higher proportion of working women than of working men are classified as professionals, but most professional women are primary or secondary school teachers and registered nurses.

find most graduates stay until the weekend of commencement as their jobs usually do not begin until June or even July."

Unger said having finals after commencement has not posed any major problems.

"Having finals after commencement could cause an undergraduate person to walk in the ceremony and not get a diploma that semester," she said. "However, we find our seniors are very responsible people, and if they are borderline in a class, they know that and are kind enough to inform family and friends of a possible additional course."

The other differences are there are fewer graduates and the Colleges of Architecture, Planning and Design and Veterinary Medicine don't have a ceremony, she said.

CHANGES | Student Union renovations set for semester break

"The burger place is a branded concept," he said. "With fast food restaurants such as Wendy's giving a more personalized menu, we hope to match up them by doing something similar."

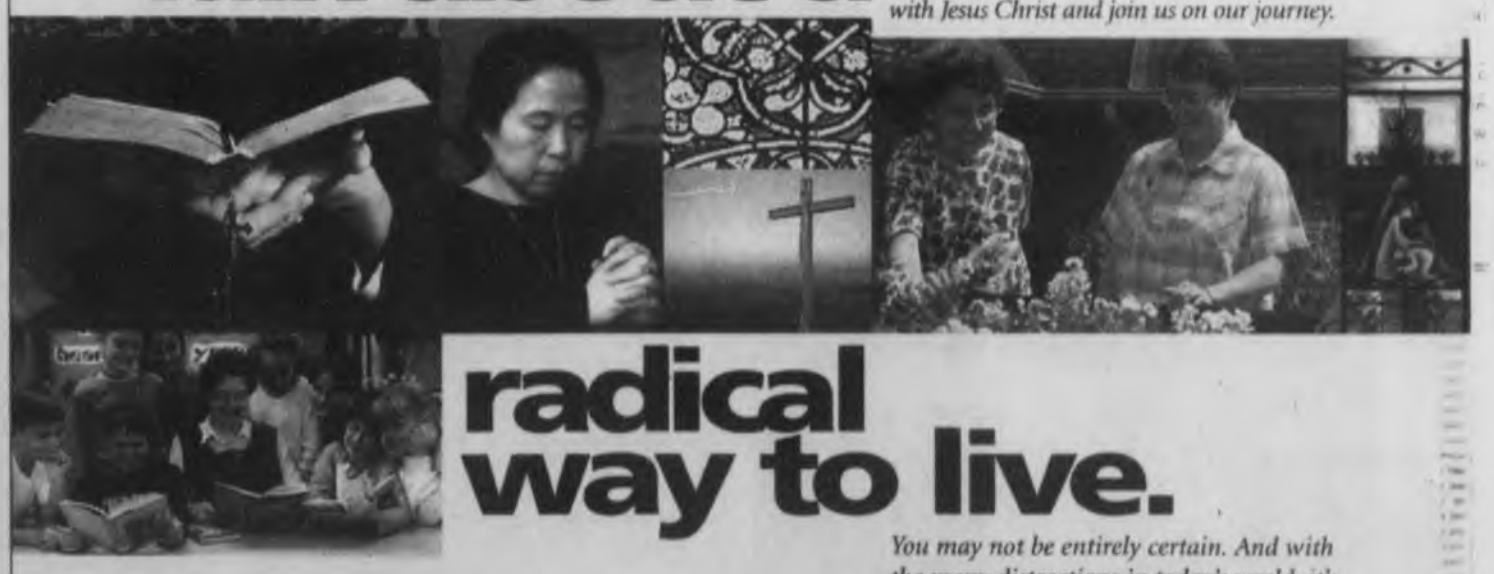
The new restaurant might consider allowing customers to substitute other menu items with the traditional burger, fries and drink.

Another addition to the Union includes a smoothie vendor, which will be located on the first floor. The vendor works closely with General Nutrition Center at the mall, Cannaughton said.

"For students wanting a healthier alternative at the Union, they can grab an all-natural performance smoothie."

"We will also undergo cosmetic changes during the break, including some spring cleaning," he said.

Cannaughton said the larger projects are reserved for the summer.



"Those projects include revamping restrooms and the marketplace in the Union," Cannaughton said.

The Sisters of St. Joseph of Wichita
Talk about a radical way to live.

Imagine a life totally devoted to Christ. A life where the rewards you seek are not of this earth. Imagine shunning materialism, realizing there's so much more to life when you follow in the footsteps of Jesus.
We are the sisters of St. Joseph. And it's true, our lives are radically different from the world around us. For ours is a community of vowed women committed to prayer, spiritual growth, and serving others.
We invite you to deepen your relationship with Jesus Christ and join us on our journey.
IS GOD CALLING YOU?

GRADUATION NOTES

Clothing — Bachelor's graduates still seeking a cap and gown need to purchase these items by Dec. 10 at the K-State Student Union Book store. There is a limited stock for the gowns, priced at $37.45.

Master's and doctoral graduates may rent their academic apparel from the bookstore. All orders will be assessed a $20 late fee, and cannot be guaranteed as to color and/or size.

The pricing is as follows:

Masters/Doctorate
Cap, Gown, Hood, Tassel	$61.15
Cap, Gown, Tassel	$42.91
Hood	$33.25

Rented apparel may be picked up from 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., Dec. 9 and 10 at the Union Bookstore.

All commencement apparel rented by faculty and students must be returned to the bookstore by noon, Dec. 14.

Party — Be sure to have plenty of refreshments and entertainment for your guests. Party supplies are available at several party stores and vendors in town.

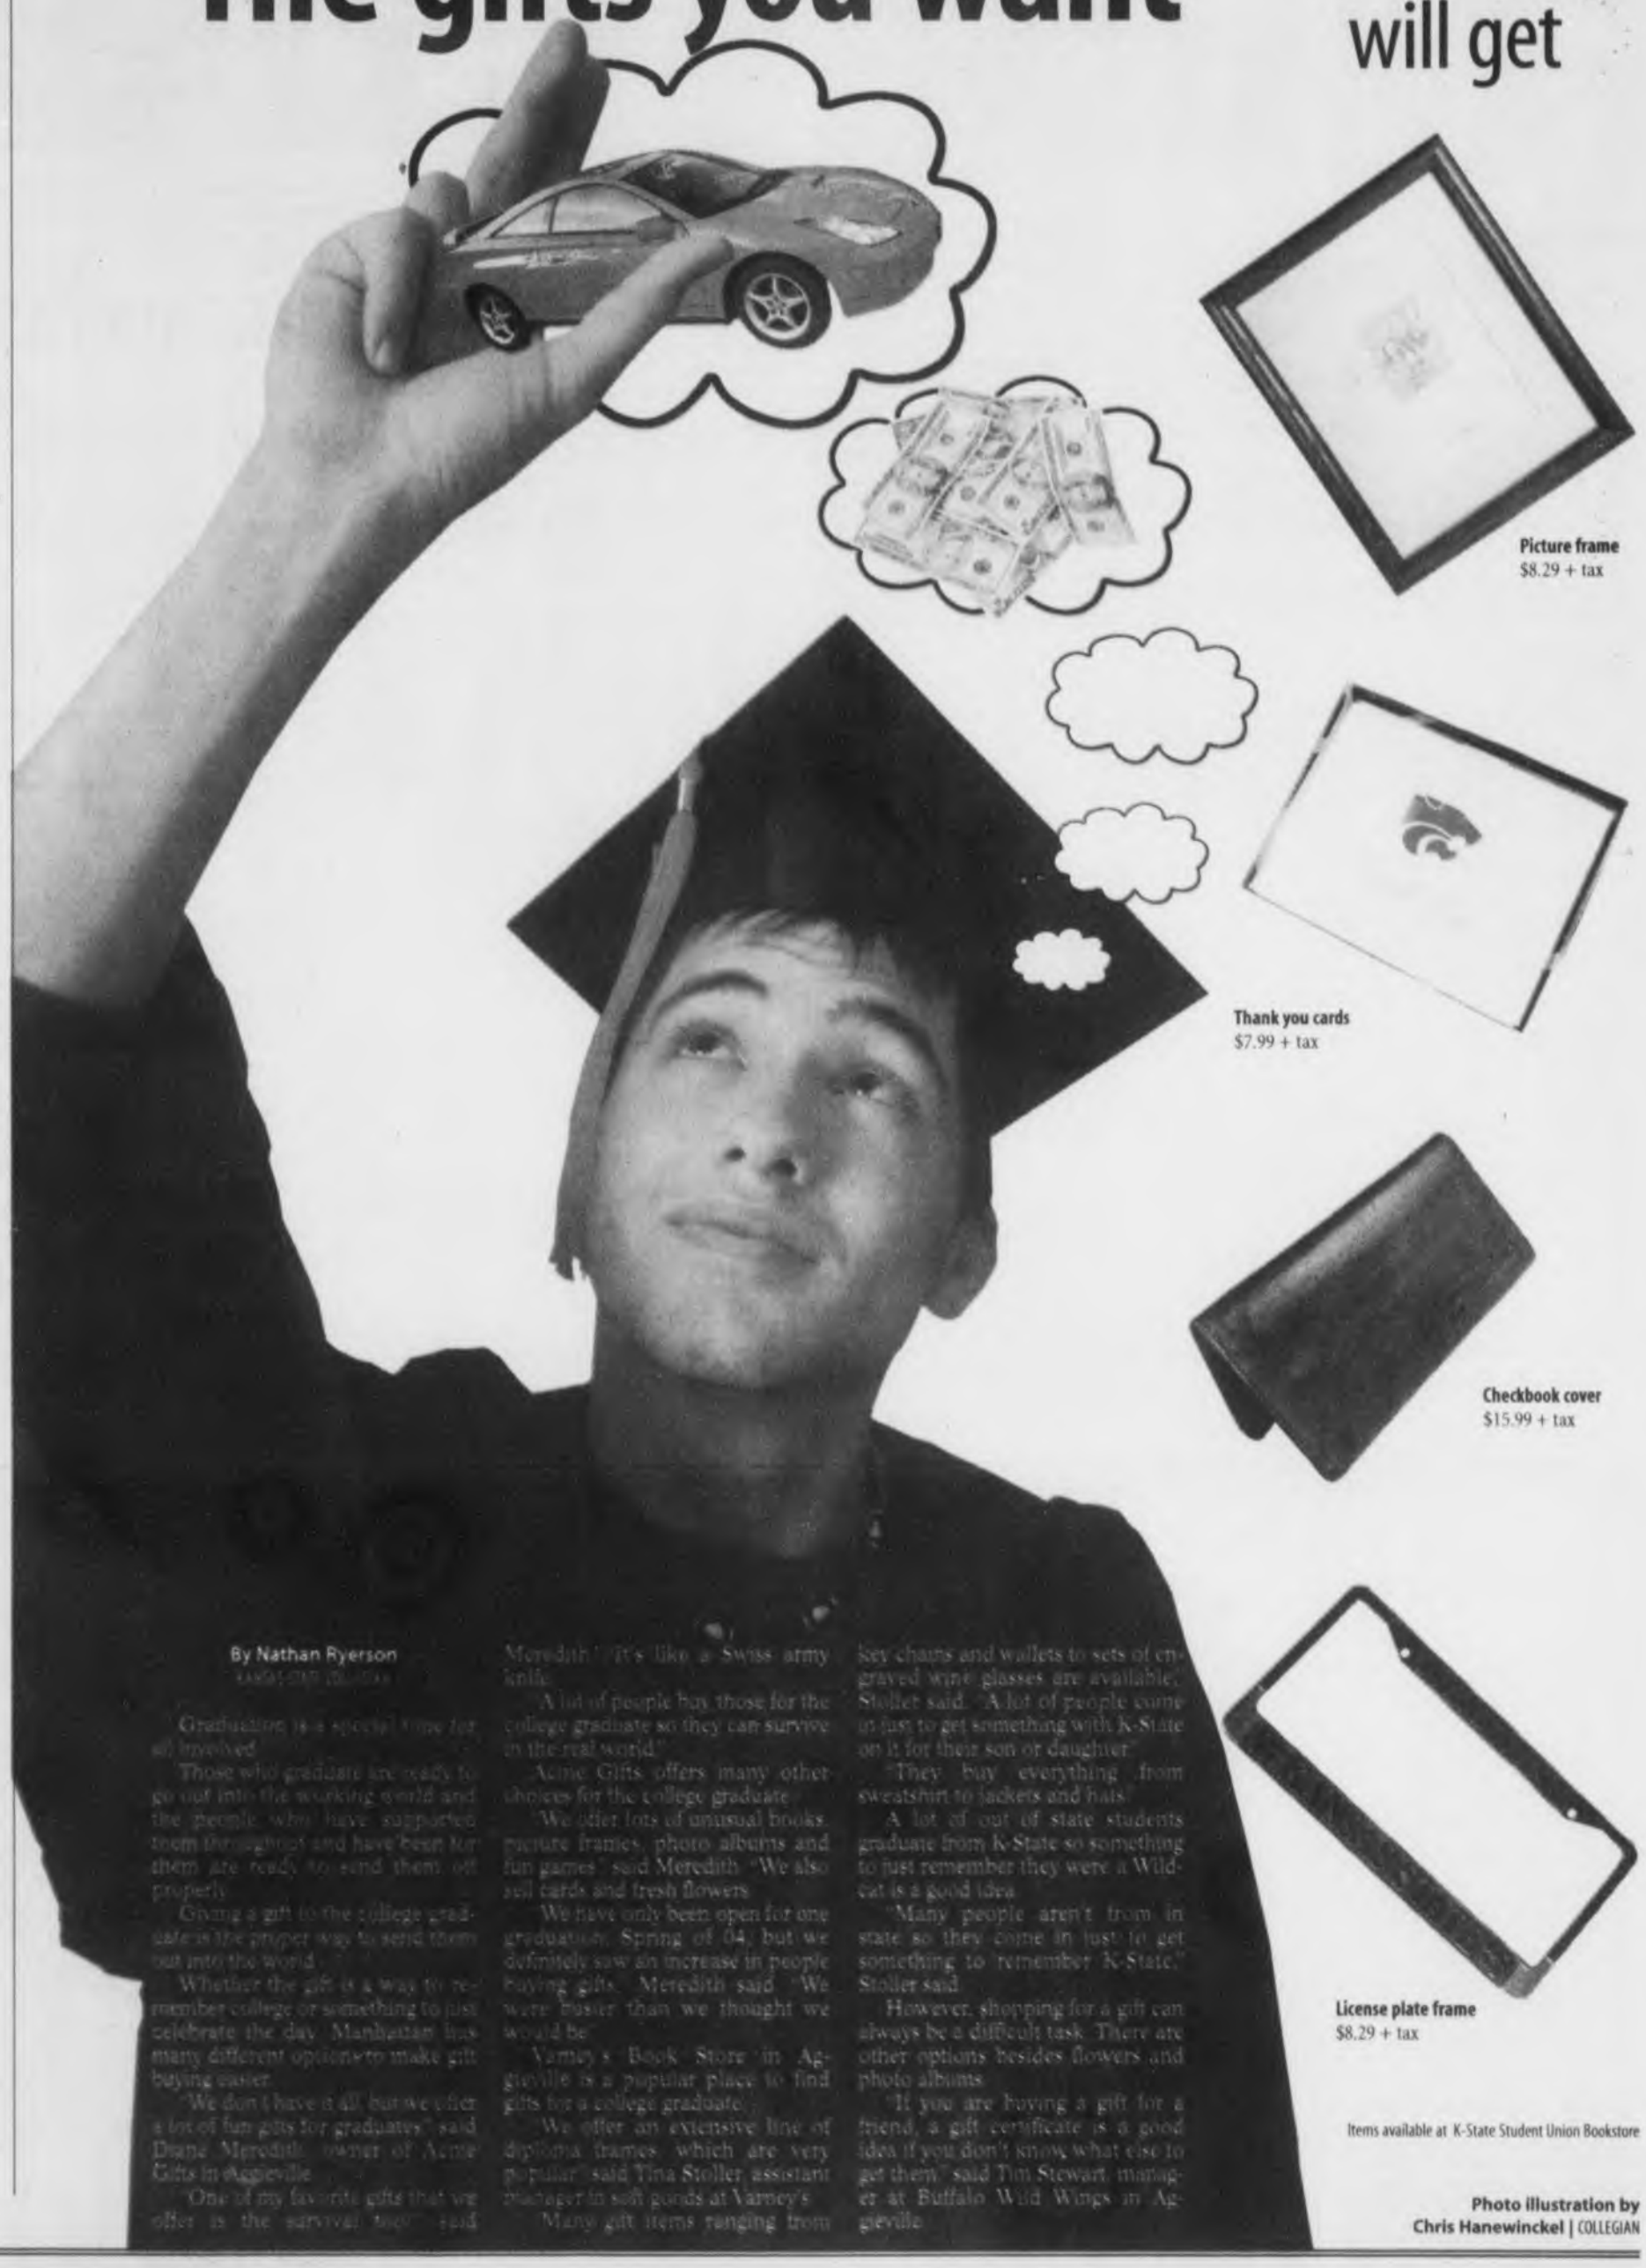
Photography — Professional photographers will take a photo of the presentation of graduate diploma covers as a service to the families. Photography companies will be in contact with graduates about purchases.

Personal photography is permitted at both McCain and Bramlage. For best results, use a film of speed ASA 400 or faster. Flash photography is not effective in the auditorium. Photos may be taken for a limited time following each ceremony in designated areas in the lobby and side galleries.

Videotapes — Professional videotapes of commencement ceremonies will be available 6-8 weeks after graduation. They can be purchased at the Union Bookstore for $19.99.

Personal videotaping is allowed at both McCain and Bramlage. Bring in extra tapes and batteries, no outlets are available for a 120-volt AC feed. Videos may be taken for a limited time following each ceremony in designated areas in the lobby and side galleries.

Address — Students who plan on moving should plan to change their permanent address with the registrar's office. This assures they will get their diploma, which comes out at the end of January.



Unpaid dues or delinquencies — Any graduate with unpaid fines or other delinquencies must contact the registrar's office and make arrangements. Students can walk through graduation but will not get a diploma with marks on their record.

Souvenirs — The K-State Student Union Recreation Center will reproduce diplomas on metal (gold or silver finish) and mount them on a walnut plaque for display purposes. The original diploma is not harmed by the process.

The cost for December graduates is $34 plus tax until March 1, 2005. Afterward the price is $45. For delivery within the United States, add $5 for shipping and handling.

The gifts you want

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Graduation is a special time for all involved.

Those who graduate are ready to go out into the working world and the people who have supported them throughout and have been for them are ready to send them off properly.

Giving a gift to the college graduate is the proper way to send them out into the world.

Whether the gift is a way to remember college or something to just celebrate the day, Manhattan has many different options to make gift buying easier.

"We don't have it all but we offer a lot of fun gifts for graduates," said Diana Meredith, owner of Acme Gifts in Aggieville.

One of my favorite gifts that we offer is the survival tool," said Meredith. "It's like a Swiss army knife.

A lot of people buy those for the college graduate so they can survive in the real world."

Acme Gifts offers many other choices for the college graduate.

We offer lots of unusual books, picture frames, photo albums and fun games," said Meredith. "We also sell cards and fresh flowers.

We have only been open for one graduation, Spring of 04, but we definitely saw an increase in people buying gifts. Meredith said. "We were busier than we thought we would be."

Varney's Book Store in Aggieville is a popular place to find gifts for a college graduate.

We offer an extensive line of diploma frames which are very popular," said Tina Stoller, assistant manager in soft goods at Varney's.

Many gift items ranging from key chains and wallets to sets of engraved wine glasses are available," Stoller said. "A lot of people come in just to get something with K-State on it for their son or daughter."

They buy everything from sweatshirt to jackets and hats."

A lot of out of state students graduate from K-State so something to just remember they were a Wildcat is a good idea.

"Many people aren't from in state so they come in just to get something to remember K-State," Stoller said.

However, shopping for a gift can always be a difficult task. There are other options besides flowers and photo albums.

"If you are buying a gift for a friend, a gift certificate is a good idea if you don't know what else to get them," said Tim Stewart, manager at Buffalo Wild Wings in Aggieville.

Graduating seniors combat stress as collegiate careers near the end

"I felt stress because I only had three to four months to get a job, find a place to live, get insurance and make sure there was enough money."

Samantha Larson
GRADUATING STUDENT

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even though Samantha Larson accepted a job two months ago, she said she often feels the stresses of graduating and entering the work world in one week.

The senior in horticulture landscape design is graduating in December and two weeks later moving to Colorado Springs, Colo., to work at a local nursery.

The job didn't come easy, though.

Larson spent much of her summer and early fall semester applying to 10 to 15 different locations in Colorado. Only one, she said, asked her to interview and eventually hired her.

"I felt extreme stress because I only had three to four months to get a job, find a place to live, get insurance and make sure there was enough money," Larson said. "I was nervous to make sure I was making the right decision."

Aaron Carlstrom, therapist at University Counseling Services, said stress is common among graduating seniors. Similar to getting married or moving, Carlstrom said graduating and finding a job is a major life event.

"All life transitions, especially big ones, come with a certain amount of stress," he said. "There's certain unknown factors involved and people tend to worry about it."

Another reason for stress, he said, is that traditional-aged college graduates – those ranging in age from 21 to 25 – experience a major shift in their identity. No longer a student, Carlstrom said these students tend to stress over what to do next.

"For the past 17 to 18 years being a student has been a very large part of their identity," he said. "If they're going into the work force, they're no longer a student so that kind of shift in identity can create stress and anxiety."

Larson agreed and said she is getting anxious to leave her family and friends in Kansas.

"The thought of moving away and leaving the nest is getting harder," she said. "I'm now becoming stressed about being in a bigger city and if I'm going to be okay with the job I took."

Despite the stress and anxiety, Carlstrom said there are ways to deal with the mixed emotions.

Soon-to-be graduates should look to the people who have helped them through transitions in the past, such as family and friends. In addition, he said it's important for students to take care of themselves and access campus resources – University Counseling Services and Career and Employment Services.

Above all, though, Carlstrom said advice depends solely on the individual.

"It depends on how proactive people are to that point," he said. "The person who has been planning for this over the course of a year is in a much different position that the person who hasn't given it much thought."

How to
De-stress instantly

1. Remember that feeling tense is something you can learn to control. Learn to relax when you begin to have stressful thoughts.
2. Close your eyes and picture a place where you feel happy and relaxed.
3. Breath from your abdomen, not your chest. Do it slowly and evenly. Yawn deeply to get oxygen into your system.
4. Drop your jaw and then drop your shoulders. Roll your head from side to side several times while picturing yourself in the place of comfort and relaxation.
5. Stretch, whether it's standing up or sitting down.
6. Calmly return to the present and the activity you're in. As you do, think about your toes, fingers and stomach, making sure they are loose and light.

Unknown awaits grads

Andrea Brown has taken all of the necessary steps so far to get into graduate school.

The senior in psychology took the graduate record exam.

She's decided on what she's going to study – higher education student affairs.

She's even narrowed down her top five school choices.

Now, though, comes the difficult part: applying and waiting to get in.

Brown said attending graduate school has been a goal ever since she entered college.

"It's always been a goal to have a doctor before my name and the prestige that comes with it," she said. "I like school a lot, so I'm going for my master's degree now and then my doctorate."

And she's not alone.

According to Carol Shanklin, assistant dean of the graduate school, K-State's graduate school has 3,619 students enrolled this fall compared to the 3,534 students enrolled in the fall 2003 semester.

The benefits, Shanklin said, of going to graduate school include job and pay advancements as well as the opportunity for students to study other fields of interest.

In some professions, such as Brown's dream job as a dean of student life at a university, master's and doctoral degrees are required. For other jobs, having a master's degree gives students an

Steps to finding the right graduate school

1. Decide on the type of program you wish to apply.
2. Identify your research interest and career goals.
3. Search for universities that have a program with an exceptional reputation in the major you wish to pursue. Criteria include a faculty with strong publications and research funding, good reputation of being an effective mentor to graduate students and research assistants, and support systems for graduate students.
4. Search the departmental website to see what faculty's current research projects include.
5. Visit the university to meet with the graduate program director, graduate faculty, and current graduate students.

Famous last words

Students, faculty to speak at events

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Speakers are a major part of every commencement ceremony, and each college chooses their own.

College of Agriculture

Two students were selected to speak at the College of Agriculture's commencement ceremony.

Jason Jones and Lynn Schwarz, seniors in animal sciences and industry, were chosen to be the student speakers.

Kevin Donnelly, assistant dean of the college, said faculty members make nominations, and the student speakers are chosen by the dean's office.

The amount of participation at the college, university and national levels is what they look at when selecting the speakers, and Jones and Schwarz participated at all three levels, he said.

"Both have been active in the college and student organizations," Donnelly said. "They also had quite a bit of service at the national level."

Besides the student speakers, Mile McKee, professor of animal sciences and industry, will be the central speaker.

College of Arts and Sciences

The College of Arts and Sciences doesn't have student speakers, but there is a faculty speaker.

Sue Zschoche, associate professor of history, will be the main speaker for the college, Dean Steve White said.

The selection was made through the dean's office.

"She has one prestigious teaching career," White said. "She's an incredibly popular professor."

College of Business Administration

Katharine Zellhoefer, senior in marketing, was selected as student speaker for the College of Business Administration, said Bente Janda, academic adviser for the college.

Janda said faculty members were asked to make recommendations, and then recommended students were asked to apply to be a speaker. Then they select the speaker based on the content of the outline the student turn in.

"She was selected based on the content," Janda said. "She's been a really good student in the College of Business."

Then, Nelson Galle, member of the Kansas Board of Regents, will be the central speaker.

College of Education

Kari Strelcheck, senior in secondary education, will be the student speaker for the College of Education, said Pam Monroe, commencement coordinator for the college of education and administrative assistant to the dean.

Untraditional education

CHRISTOPHER HARROP

"Third time's a charm," goes the old saying.

"No thanks," I respond time and again. I won't be waiting to find out.

This Saturday, I will make good use of my second approval for graduation.

Before I finally matriculate, I'll have changed my major and minor about as many times as one can between two departments.

I started here full-time in fall 2001. That's right – I'm graduating in three-and-a-half years.

So sue me, condemn me or have me committed. I may be crazy for not staying longer, but I've had my degree of fun.

What have I learned from all this?

I've found learning should come from all aspects of your life: class, work, family, friends, faith and solitude. If you do things right, none of these areas should stick out when you look back on your college career and ponder what prompted you to learn the most.

So, because all seniors are narcissistic know-it-alls, I'll take this final opportunity to impart the following advice to you, the future classes of K-State:

Don't be afraid to take chances with your coursework. You can explore other departments and colleges without tacking on an extra year or two onto that four-year program.

In my tenure in Manhattan, I've toyed with the idea of getting as many as five degrees (my two current degrees plus three more from the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications).

Furthermore, spend at least one summer taking classes at K-State. My first summer here was 2000, the year before my senior year of high school. Faculty and workers willing to work during the summer generally commit themselves to the forgotten semester as much as they do each fall and spring. The campus is relatively quite for studying, and the bars are far less crowded.

If the summer semester isn't for you, get a job. Just be sure to use that extra money to take a few extra credit hours at K-State in a topic you'll enjoy, or at least something that broadens your academic horizons or career planning.

Go to class as much as humanly possible. The experience will enrich your life moreso than any other activity in which you might participate.

Sure, some class periods seem akin to torture, but if you spend enough time finding quality courses and professors, each class period will be an entertaining and enlightening experience.

Get to know your professors only if it's what you want to do. Everyone needs some kind of reference after finishing school, but you will recall your experiences here much more fondly if you makes friends with the professors you actually get along with in a cordial manner.

If you can, take a class in Constitutional law, Roman history or science fiction literature. You'll be significantly rewarded academically, and at the least, you'll be fired up for learning.

I've found there is no exact formula for maximizing your college experience.

I never took what I would call a "fluff" class. I never attended a single football game. I never spent more than two hours continuously in Aggieville. I've had fun, and I have regrets.

In a very untraditional time here at K-State, I will participate in the ultimate tradition – commencement.

I will miss this place, but I look forward to my new job out in the real world.I don't suppose I or anyone else could ask for more.

I thank you – my classmates, colleagues and devoted professors – for the best three-and-a-half years of my life.

Graduates receive discounts, bargains through alumni offers

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

December graduates may feel they're leaving behind all the good deals college students receive, but the discounts don't stop once their diplomas are in hand.

Amy Button Renz, president of the K-State Alumni Association, said graduates who choose to become members of the Alumni Association have a number of benefits.

The main benefit, she said, is receiving the K-Stater magazine four times a year. The magazine allows alumni to keep in touch with the university through campus news, events and updates.

Other benefits to the association include discounts to the K-State Student Union Bookstore and other merchants as well as services, such as discounted childcare during home football games.

"The Alumni Association is for those students who graduate and want to stay connected with the university," Button Renz said.

"We feel that lifelong link starts as a prospective student to the time you're a K-State student and that you when you graduate, you hope to stay involved as a volunteer, maintaining membership in the alumni association."

The first five years of membership is half-price for recent graduates at $20 per year, but almost all of K-State's colleges pay for the first year of membership for its graduates.

Graduates have options to consolidate, invest

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students have several options when it comes to preparing for their financial future.

Many choose to consolidate their loans and invest after they graduate.

Pat Scherschel, consolidation product executive for Sallie Mae, said consolidating student loans can be practical for many students.

"Consolidating is when you combine the number of loans into one loan," she said. "You then have a single payment and a longer payback period."

Students who consolidate their loans with low interest rates have an advantage, Scherschel said.

If a student consolidates their Federal Stafford loan during the six-month grace period after they graduate, they will lock in the current interest rate of 2.875 percent, Scherschel said.

"The rates are the lowest in the history of the program," she said.

Scherschel said a dependent undergraduate student can borrow a maximum of $17,125 in Stafford loans. If they consolidate their loans with the current interest rate of 2.875 percent, they can pay an average of $117 per month over the next 15 years.

Martha Holler, spokeswoman for Sallie Mae, said the median amount of loans consolidated for undergraduate students is $16,500.

Although loan consolidation has many benefits, it isn't for everyone, Scherschel said.

"Borrowers need to think of consolidating from their individual point of view," she said.

Carlin Murphy, financial consultant for A.G. Edwards and Sons, Inc., said students should look into investing their money.

Students should set goals to decide what they are trying to accomplish, he said.

"The biggest thing is to set goals to determine what you need to decide how long you have to get there," he said. "Then an adviser can help you determine the best way to help you truly reach your goal."

Murphy said most 20-somethings are saving for their wedding, honeymoon, a new car, or their first house.

Their are many different ways to save, but the key is getting started, Murphy said.

"If they save $1 a day from the time you are 25 years old until you are 65 years old and get a little over 5 percent return, you can earn about $45,000," he said.

Saving $1 a day at 9 percent interest will add up to $125,000, Murphy said.

"It's equal to giving up a bottle of water a day," he said.

Mutual funds are the most common form of investment among college students, Murphy said.

"Because of their diversification, they are the most common tool, because most college students don't have much money to work with," he said.

Murphy said there are two types of mutual funds: passively managed and actively managed.

"Passively managed or indexed funds are linked to a specific index," he said.

However, actively managed funds are not linked to a specific index.

"With actively managed funds you are hiring a fund manager or a team of managers that make the decisions as far as what goes into the portfolio," he said.

Murphy said time is the biggest thing that affects an investment's return.

"Mutual funds are long-term investments, and time is your friend, so the earlier you can start investing the better," he said.

It is also important to have an emergency reserve, Murphy said.

"Everybody needs to have an emergency fund that they can fall back on, because you don't want to be digging into a long-term investment for a short-term need," he said. "I usually tell people to have enough money set aside to be able to live for three to six months."

How to Calculate loan consolidation

1. Go to www.smartloan.com.
2. Click on calculate your savings on the right side of the screen.
3. Follow the steps to find possible ways to consolidate.

advantage, Shanklin said.

"It provides graduates a unique set of knowledge and competencies that they can use to increase their competitiveness in the job market," she said.

Jennifer Pollard, graduate student in student counseling and personnel services, said she decided to attend graduate school to pursue her passion for sports. Pollard wants to do sports administration work upon her May 2006 graduation.

"I'm open to work at any place, just to get some experience," she said.

Brown said the process has had both its ups and downs.

"It's been stressful – I make a to-do list every week – but it's also a rewarding process that's been a lot of fun," she said.

SPEAKERS | Presenters differ

Monroe said the student speaker is chosen from faculty recommendations.

LeAnn Clark, third-grade teacher at Hesston Elementary school, will be the main commencement speaker for the college. Monroe said the speaker is usually someone who deals with education somehow.

College of Engineering

Dean Terry King will be the main speaker for the College of Engineering. There isn't a student speaker.

College of Human Ecology

Lindsey Rexroat, senior in early childhood education, will be the student speaker for the College of Human Ecology, said Cara Richardson, events director for the college.

Dean Carol Kellet will be the main speaker for the ceremony.

College of Technology and Aviation

Doug Zerr, senior in mechanical engineering, will be the student speaker for the College of Technology and Aviation, Kristin Magette, coordinator of public relations, said.

Magette said Zerr is the president of the Student Governing Association at K-State-Salina, and that's why he is speaking.

Provost Duane Nellis will be the main speaker.

ALUMNI | Grads get discounts

After the five years, the cost increases to $40 per year for individuals and $45 per year for a joint membership. A 20-percent discount is offered to those individuals wishing to purchase a lifelong membership.

Discounts are also available to new graduates who purchase athletic tickets.

Melynda Stein, assistant director of marketing for the athletic department, said recent graduates have the Young Alumni student ticket option when making purchases. In its first year, the Young Alumni option allows students to purchase tickets at a fraction of the cost of a regular season ticket.

"We decided to do this basically because K-State seniors are so loyal, and it's a way to thank them and give them the option to still come back and watch games," Stein said. "We know a lot of grads move to Wichita and Kansas City and would still be able to come to games."

The cost, she said, is equal to an ICAT season ticket for an undergraduate student. The Young Alumni rates this year were $175 for football and $71 for men's basketball tickets. Although the basketball season has already begun, Stein said December graduates can still purchase Young Alumni basketball tickets.

Stein said the prices are valid for two years, but graduates still have benefits when that time expires.

"Once the two years are up, you can become a regular season ticket holder," she said. "It's a nice bridge between student and regular season ticket holder."

The discounts help attract future K-State alumni – 37,000 individuals are Alumni Association members – but Button-Renz said it's not the most important factor.

"It's important to recognize as graduates they are just getting started and have a disposable income, but we still want them to be connected to the university," she said.

"We have a very good success in keeping alumni, because K-State alumni are very loyal through membership or through donations."

Winter break offers job, volunteer opportunities

Career and Employment Services aids searches

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

To some students, winter break is a time to relax, but to others, it is a time to get ahead of the game and earn some cash.

Kerri Day Keller, director of Career and Employment Services, said the break is a great time for students to get jobs and some real world experience.

Although many stores have hired their seasonal employees, there may be some opportunities left, said Sara VanAllen, marketing manager of Manhattan Town Center.

"They look around for employees starting in October. Starting early is probably key," she said. "Especially in terms of retail opportunities, if students are going back to a metropolitan area, there may be some employees wanted over the holiday season."

With many students looking for job opportunities, they must be competitive in the application process, Keller said.

"Whether you are applying for a full-time or a part-time position, you should make the process as professional as possible," she said. "You should have a résumé that is complete, without typos and misspellings."

"Each one of our merchants like eager and responsible employees," VanAllen said. "A store is only as good as its team."

The mall compiles job opportunity listings at its customer service desk, located near the Bath and Body Works.

Job opportunities through local retailers will have to be contacted on a one-by-one basis. At stores such as Wal-Mart, a computer application kiosk is available for application submissions.

For other employment opportunities, students are encouraged to look at the Career and Employment Services Web site, Keller said. The site provides daily updates of employment, internship, and volunteer opportunities within the Manhattan area.

If students want to get more information on interviews or building a strong résumé, Keller said their services are open to any students on campus.

"Students can contact us or look at our site, and they should get some good details on what to do to get a job," she said.

However, if students cannot find a good employment opportunity during break, there are several alternatives to stay occupied. Keller said the holiday season is a great time to volunteer.

Flint Hills Breadbasket Client Service Coordinator Megan Clark said volunteers are welcome year round.

"We host events such as the Thanksgiving and Christmas dinner, and we always need an army of troops to help out," she said.

Manhattan Optimist Club sells Christmas trees, with members volunteering to help the sales. Thomas Holder, Optimist Club president, said they welcome volunteer helpers at the tree lot.

Volunteer experience is comparable to employment at a business, Keller said. Students who work for a charity can put that experience on their résumé, something that employers look for.

Finals distractions come easily

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Looking for something to do after you've finished studying and have free time between finals? No, probably not.

Looking for something to do while you are avoiding studying for finals? That's more like it.

Here are a few fun ways to distract yourself in Manhattan during finals week.

Shop for funky last minute stocking stuffers at Acme Gifts in Aggieville. Browse through the store's selection of offbeat magnets, jewelry, candy and miniatures.

Go to the Manhattan hill during a snowstorm and get a breathtaking view of the snowflakes falling over the town. Play Christmas music to get in the mood, holiday mood that is.

Relive your childhood and visit Santa at the Manhattan Town Center. Sit on his lap, give him your Christmas list and enjoy a free candy cane.

Relieve some tension by bowling a couple of games or playing some pool in the Union. Bowling cost $2 per game and $1 for shoe rental. Pool is $3.30 for an hour.

If you're of age and need to relax with a drink, head to Coco Bolo's for some sangria. It's tastier than beer and will "relax" you faster.

When you are feeling artsy, head to a little-explored area of campus: the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. Explore the glass art of artist Lino Tagliapietra.

Take a drive around town and look at Christmas lights. Laugh at the tacky ones, and see if you can find the Clark W. Griswold house of Manhattan.

If none of this sounds entertaining, there is always the old standby of just kicking back and watching television.

Just don't forget to go to your finals.

From local to international, semester stories wrap up

Iraq war, budget cuts among ongoing issues

Iraq
The war on terror rages on in the cradle of civilization. As the number of fatalities continues to rise, U.S. leaders are saying the number of American troops on the ground will increase to around 150,000 by January.

Murray murder trial
K-State English professor Thomas Murray has been charged with the murder of his ex-wife, Carmin Ross-Murray. Murray was arrested on Oct. 5. Testimony in his criminal trial began recently in Douglas County, Kan.

Kemp murder case
Benjamin Appleby, 29, was arrested Nov. 8 in Connecticut and charged in Ali Kemp's murder. Kemp had just finished her freshman year at K-State before she was found dead June 12, 2002, in Leawood, Kan.

School daze
Budget cuts abound in Manhattan-Ogden USD 383. In a controversial decision, the school board decided on Nov. 3 to close Theodore Roosevelt Elementary next year in order to save money. Other cuts considered involved elementary foreign language, some sports and music programs.

El Cazador
On Aug. 16, 15 employees of Manhattan's El Cazador Mexican restaurant were taken into custody by immigration officials. Twelve of those individuals were deported, and three bonded out of jail. The restaurant, along with the Junction City and Topeka locations, which were also closed, has since struggled to reopen because of problems finding adequate staffing.

Elections
President George W. Bush one-upped his father by defeating Massachusetts Sen. John Kerry and securing a second term in office. The election was strikingly similar to the 2000 election in that a winner was not determined until the wee hours of the morning. Bush won a majority of the popular vote and should win a majority of the electoral vote.

K-State traffic fatalities
Collegian Opinion Editor Barbara Meyer, 20, was killed in an automobile accident Oct. 10 on Interstate 70. Karl Gabrielson, 69, and his wife, Tamara, 43, were killed in a car accident Nov. 7 while driving south on K-99. Karl Gabrielson served as a K-State custodial specialist for 36 years. Eric Richards, 21, a K-State-Salina student, died Nov. 28 in a car accident in Olathe, Kan.

Sproles, Chesang, volleyball team highlight fall athletic performances

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the winter sports – men's and women's basketball and indoor track and field – build off the results so far in their young seasons, here's a recap of the good and bad of K-State athletics this fall.

FOOTBALL

Top performer

Senior running back Darren Sproles rushed for 1,318 yards and 11 touchdowns, while rewriting K-State and Big 12 Conference record books in the process. He became the Big 12 career all-purpose yardage leader this season.

Overview

There's no way to sugarcoat the fact that, at 4-7, the Wildcats had their worst season since Coach Bill Snyder's first year in 1989. K-State was up and down all season as the team battled consistency issues and injuries to key players, including quarterback Dylan Meier, linebacker Ted Sims and other defenders.

Despite the struggles, the Wildcats still had a shot at the Big 12 North Division title toward the season's end.

Darren Sproles
Chris Hanewickel

VOLLEYBALL

Top performer

It's tough to pick the top Wildcat on a squad with the likes of Vali Hejjas, Lisa Martin and Angie Lastra, but senior setter Gabby Guerre was the team's steady leader all year.

A first-team All-Big 12 Conference selection, Guerre did a little bit of everything for the Cats. She finished her career second all-time at K-State in career assists.

Overview

Another year, another NCAA Tournament appearance for Coach Suzie Fritz and the Cats, who finished the season 20-11 and advanced to the second round of the tournament.

Faced with filling the holes left by departed All-American Lauren Goehring and Big 12 Libero of the Year Laura Downey-Wallace, the Cats were able to return to postseason play for the ninth-straight year. Fritz said her team battled consistency issues, and the team was upset by Colorado and Texas Tech during the conference schedule.

CROSS COUNTRY

Top performer

No surprise here. Senior Mathew Chesang's 12th place finish at the NCAA Championships on Nov. 22 made him the first K-State All-American since 1992. The finish was also the highest at the NCAA meet for a Wildcat since 1971.

Overview

Although Chesang's sensational season stands out, there were other quality performances on both the men's and women's teams in Michael Smith's first year as head coach. The women won the Bob Timmons Invitational to begin the season, and senior Trisha Culbertson barely missed All-Big 12 honors.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Top performer

Freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia played like a veteran during the fall season. She won her first 11 matches, won two tournaments and finished the season 15-2 and is No. 9 in the ITA Central Region.

Overview

Kvaratskhelia was not the only Wildcat who had an excellent fall.

Coach Steve Bietau's team had several other solid individual performances, namely senior Maria Rosenberg. Rosenberg continued her march up the K-State career singles wins list, to second place, after a 12-7 fall record.

MEN'S GOLF

Top performer

Junior Ben Kern was Mr. Consistency this fall – he never finished below 23rd place. Kern also shot the lowest round on the team with a 63 and the lowest two-round score with a 136 for the fall.

Overview

Led by Kern and senior Matt Van Cleave, the Wildcats had their moments this fall. The team finished second at the Kansas Invitational and finished the season on solid footing. Against some of the best competition, the team was fifth at the Alister MacKenzie Invitational and seventh at The Nelson Invitational.

EQUESTRIAN

Overview

Under first-year head coach Teresa Slough, the Wildcats continued to establish a reputation as a top equestrian program.

The Western and English squads both had two shows in the fall, and both squads took home High Point Team honors numerous times. At its show in Manhattan, the Western squad tied for High Point Team honors and won High Point Team honors on the weekend. The English squad was also successful at its home show, posting three wins.

ROWING

Overview

Though they only had three competitions this fall, the Wildcats made the most of them.

The Wildcats beat rival Kansas in the Sunflower Showdown, winning three out of five races. The team, under the leadership of coach Patrick Sweeney, also had strong showings at the Head of Des Moines and the Head of the Iowa.

WOMEN'S GOLF

Top performer

Freshman Kali Quick showed the team has a bright future ahead. Quick led the Wildcats in their final two fall tournaments, finishing fifth at the Marilynn Smith Sunflower Invitational and tied for 14th at the Edwin Watts/Palmetto Intercollegiate.

Overview

The Wildcats had their share of rough times this fall. Though they did place in the top-five as a team twice, the Wildcats finished ninth-place or below three times.

Maintain sanity in preparation for finals

Hello, and welcome to your run-of-the-mill finals column.

I know most of you only pick up these beautiful finals guide to look at the ads – we like ads here.

SCOTT SEEL

Sure, there's the best of the Fourum and some pretty kicking crosswords, but sit down with me and let me tell you how to get through finals.

Now some might say it's ironic for me to give advice on studying, since I don't really do it, but consider me an objective third party.

It's simple really. Without exception, every semester at least seven students suffer a nervous breakdown during finals week.

So how do you avoid that fate?

I'm glad you asked.

Get over it.

Take a step back, relax and realize the task ahead of you really isn't that daunting.

And heavens to Betsy, stop studying so much.

How effective a test-taker can you really be when you're working on cigarettes and Red Bull?

Sleep is your friend, even if it means you have to cut your studying time from 26 hours all the way down to 22.

Without exception, you will perform better on a final after having slept for at least a few hours.

Also, do something during finals week to take your mind off everything.

Go to the bars, have a party, go to the Rec and play some ball – do something other than studying.

Your sanity is vital, and it will be kind of hard to make it to Umberger Hall for that 8:30 economics final if you've been institutionalized.

Lastly, never underestimate the power of B.S.

For those of you lucky enough to be in arts and sciences classes where you get to take essay tests, don't fret.

I'll never understand why people are so afraid of essay tests.

With multiple choice tests, you have two routes: either you know the information, or you guess.

Either way is bad.

If you have to know things, that involves studying a bunch and going to class and the likes, and who really wants to do that?

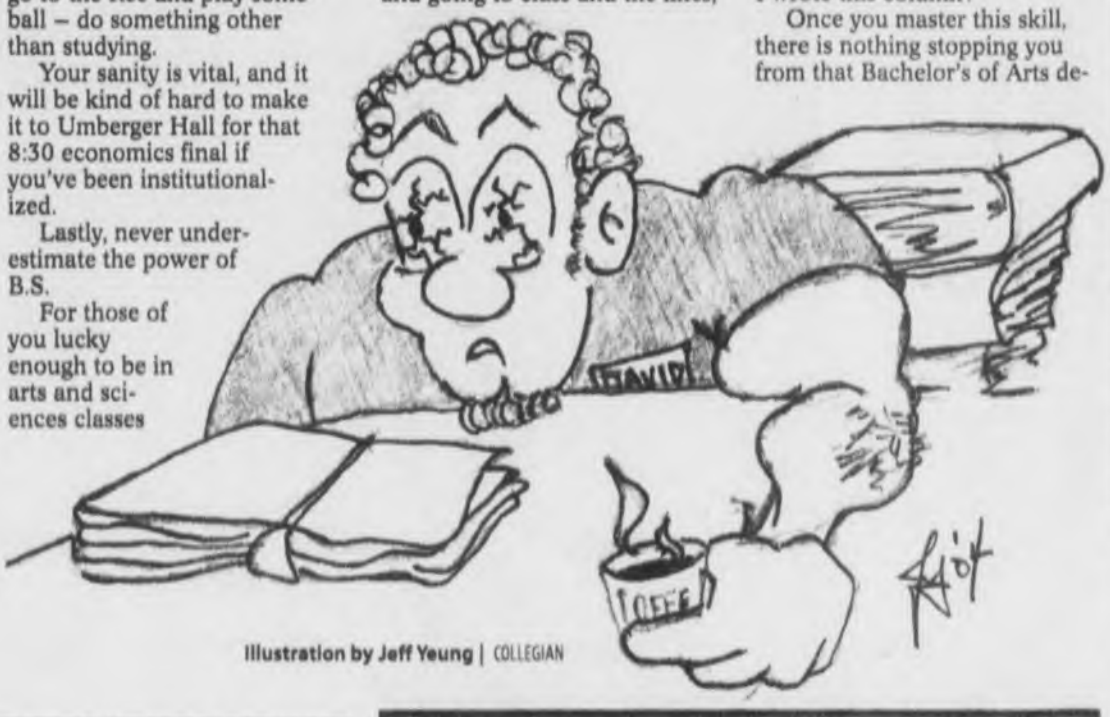

Illustration by Jeff Yeung | COLLEGIAN

If you guess, well then you fail and your parents threaten to kick you out and lock you in the closet and stuff. That's bad, too.

That is why I love essays – you don't have to actually know anything, you just have to make it sound like you do.

Seriously, how do you think I wrote this column?

Once you master this skill, there is nothing stopping you from that Bachelor's of Arts degree, you are home free.

So, that's three steps to surviving finals week.

First, don't spend the entire time studying, pace yourself.

Second, do fun things like getting insanely drunk – only if you're 21 or older, of course.

Thirdly, make stuff up for essays, it's great fun.

In summary, Confuscious say stop worrying so much.

CAMPUS FOURUM | BEST OF FOURUM FOR FALL 2004

Holy Crap. It's the Fourum.

Just in case you didn't know it, just because you have "dean" after your name, you are not better than us custodians. We are all on an equal level, and we are as intelligent as you, whether you realize it or not. Quit looking down on us.

Why don't we take it down a notch? Bam!

If the grass is always greener on the other side, maybe you should take better care of your own lawn.

I wanna go to Greece during a thunderstorm, so I can see Greece lightning.

Barbara Meyer, will you marry me?

Who is Brian Luft?

It may be a little too late for this, but here's a little advice. If you're taking a class that meets from 2:30 - 5:20, always take it with a professor who smokes. Then you're guaranteed a break.

The eye of Sauron watches ceaselessly atop Mount Doom.

Anyone who would stand out in the street with a flashlight in the pouring rain and get soaked just to keep people from getting their cars stalled out really rocks.

Leann Sulzen is such a heartbreaker.

Shouldn't you die before you have a student plaza named after you?

My natural disasters teacher is the looniest man I've ever met in my life. Today in class, he told us he wished he had a vibrator.

Shanna Hajek is wrong. The unemployment rate is wrong, It's 5.4 percent. Maybe she can do a better job of research and get things right the first time.

On Monday, we can buy assault rifles. Thanks Republicans, I feel safer.

Kerry's father was a newt, and his mother smelled of elderberries.

Yeah, and for some reason, they still haven't caught that rapist from the summer.

Oh, wait, they tore down Denison?

Whatever happened to Ron?
For those of you in Johnson County who were wondering, a co-op is a grain elevator.

To Lacey Storer about her article on body piercings: thanks for the tips. It helped me in my sexual experience last night.

Hey Altaf, since you like Lawrence so much, why don't you just go to KU?

Flush the Johns, go Bush!

We're now accepting T-shirt orders for the Grant Reichert fan club.

OK, Logan, I admit it. All I want to do is sit around and drink.

A Fourum haiku:
Oh Little Debbie
Such tasty snack cakes you make
Me oh so fat.

I feel kinda like Rick Springfield, but I want J. Scott's girl.

To Logan Adams: This is your mother, and you were conceived at a fraternity. Who took the F from the Fiji sign? That's awful. Long live the Pikes.

Thank God "...And Rightly So" is back. Best cartoon ever.

This new email thing is great!!! I <3 the Collegian.

Jeremy Parker's moustache is pristine. Almost Yanni-like.

I just turned on the radio and heard Disney songs. Way to spend your new money, 91.9.

Hey, we had a forum at Mill Valley High School, too — the bathroom walls.

White House Press Secretary Scott McClellan is the American version of Baghdad Bob.

Does anyone else find it ironic that our K-State soldiers are playing Risk in the Union?

Well, it looks like liberals have shown their true colors with the, uh, altering of College Republican sidewalk chalkings with the phrase "Kill the Poor." I guess it's pretty plain to be seen that freedom of speech doesn't mean a lot to you.

Don't buy ketchup. You make Kerry richer.

The president should never ever forget about Poland.

Nick Dreiling, freshman in business, and his father, Jeff Dreiling, Kansas City-area resident, carry Nick's dresser into his new apartment in Aggie Villas on Bluemont Avenue. Nick was one of many students asked to move out of Haymaker Hall at the end of last semester, but with all the new apartment complexes going up, finding a new home was easier for Nick.

Students move to new apartments after Haymaker renovations

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nick Dreiling had to make a decision about where to live this semester.

His choices were Marlatt Hall or off-campus, because he could no longer live in Haymaker Hall. Dreiling, freshman in business, chose to move into an apartment with a fellow seventh floor Haymaker resident.

Dreiling is a resident at the newly built Aggie Villas, 1020 Bluemont Ave. He didn't have to pay a fee for moving off-campus.

"Instead of going to Marlatt, I moved here, just because it's (Marlatt) all guys," he said.

Haymaker Hall is undergoing renovations in one wing, so residents had to relocate either to another residence hall or off-campus. Otherwise, Dreiling said he wouldn't have moved out.

"I had cool guys on my floor, but that all moved out too," he said. "I didn't want to move."

Aggie Villas is one of several apartment complexes that have either recently been built or are being built in the area east of K-State's main campus and in Aggieville.

Ockert Fourie, senior planner in the community development department of the City of Manhattan, said rezoning allowed for higher density living in the area.

He said it is now zoned for multiple-family residential housing, which is the highest level allowed in Manhattan. The new zoning regulations were approved in October 2003.

Fourie said there was a need for higher density housing in Manhattan, so rezoning of the area provided the option for more

Chris Berens, Manhattan resident, uses a scraper to get ice off the apartment complex he is building on Bluemont Avenue. Berens has worked on the new fourplex since October and plans to finish in late May. The new building located one block from campus and Aggieville will house 10 people.

Sebelius sets state's priorities

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – The Kansas economy won't be healthy unless legislators find long-term solutions to rising health care costs and improving the funding of public schools, Gov. Kathleen Sebelius said Monday.

In her annual State of the State address to legislators, Sebelius said Kansas is improving, citing an economy that added 25,000 jobs over the past year.

However, Sebelius said, rising health care costs have created a crisis, leaving uninsured Kansans "in financial peril every day of their lives." She also noted the Kansas Supreme Court has ordered changes in how the state funds its schools to ensure a suitable education for all children.

"Neither the people of Kansas nor the court will accept gamesmanship in interpreting the words of the decision," Sebelius said. "Reducing the standard for a 'suitable' education is not an option."

Sebelius also called for strengthening campaign finance laws and attacking illegal methamphetamine production. She said her proposed budget will increase overall state spending by less than 1 percent during the fiscal year beginning July 1. She is to release details today.

"Let's think of new opportunities, not past constraints, as we visualize the future of the state that we call home," Sebelius said.

Legislative leaders viewed education funding as the session's biggest issue. The Supreme Court last week gave legislators until April 12 to fix the state's formula for distributing $2.7 billion in aid.

Sebelius, a Democrat facing large Republican majorities in both legislative chambers, didn't offer proposals for answering the court. She mentioned her own failed attempt last year to phase in $310 million in new spending over three years.

3,500 soldiers deployed to Iraq

Fort Riley troops, families prepare for 2nd tour of duty

By Kirk Bray
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fort Riley soldiers prepared to deploy to Iraq at a ceremony with few dry eyes in Bramlage Coliseum on Jan. 5.

Many of the 3,500 soldiers being deployed were being shipped out for their second tour of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Units to be sent include the 2nd Battalion, 34th Armor; 1st Brigade, 1st Infantry Division; and the 3rd Brigade, 1st Armored Division.

When they are deployed later this month, the troops will be added to about 1,300 Fort Riley soldiers who are currently serving and will replace other units who have completed their duties.

This will be the second tour for the 3rd Brigade, who returned from Iraq early in 2004.

"I'm pumped up," said Staff Sgt. Scott Vallenavellos, who returned with the brigade from its first tour in February.

He said the training his unit received since then would better address the new duties they will face.

"Now I know what I'm getting into," he said

Sgt. Maj. Falkner, a veteran of the first Gulf War, also noticed the new preparations.

"The first time the training was hasty, two or three months notice," Falkner said.

Due to changes on the ground in Iraq, soldiers were trained in more realistic urban settings. Weapons training was made first priority, even for support troops.

"The troops are higher quality this time, with more training," he said. Every soldier is an infantryman."

Among the guests at the ceremony was Senator-elect Roger Reitz, a veteran of World War II.

"I'm distressed to see so many soldiers leaving, some have just been home," he said. "The rest of the U.S. doesn't see the real sacrifice."

Longhorn's country-western saloon returns to Aggieville

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Making its second debut on New Year's Eve, Longhorn's Saloon returned to Aggieville after a two-year hiatus.

Patrick Shannon, one of the new owners of Longhorn's, said he and his partner brought Longhorn's back because they thought there was still a need for a country-western bar.

"We just felt that there was a pretty good need in Aggieville," Shannon said. "Seeing that K-State is an ag college, we just needed an ag bar."

The country-western dance club was part of the Aggieville scene for six years before it was changed in 2003 to Shotz, a hip-hop style dance club.

Robyn Williams, a waitress at both Shotz and Longhorn's, said Shotz was a popular spot when it first opened, but lost some of its college crowd when the people and the music started to change. Williams said she thought Shotz never was given the chance to regain its college-aged clients.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Longhorn's Saloon came back to Aggieville after a two-year hiatus. The change happened on New Year's Eve.

"It got to be where it was hard to get the college crowd back," Williams, senior in public relations, said. "After it changed back, nobody wanted to try it."

Toby Verstraete, former co-owner of the club when it was both Longhorn's and Shotz, said the decision to sell had nothing to do with bad business, but rather she and her former partner Matt Church both felt it was just time to move on.

"We'd been wanting to sell for a couple of years," Verstraete said, "and it was just the right time and place."

Longhorn's will feature primarily country music now, with dance music played sparingly throughout the night.

"It'll be like it was back when it was (originally) Longhorn's," said Jase Johnson, co-owner of Longhorn's. "Throughout the night they'll play dance music three or four times as people get up

10 THINGS YOU MISSED DURING WINTER BREAK

Deadly tsunami strikes

By Khampha Bouaphanh | FORT WORTH STAR-TELEGRAM

Volunteers pull a body from the wreckage in Banda Aceh, Indonesia, on Monday. Rescuers are still finding and burying hundreds — and sometimes thousands — of bodies a day. After collecting and burying 2,500 bodies Sunday, workers have now buried 58,281 bodies, and the government believes another 50,000 people are missing.

A powerful tsunami hit communities from Thailand to East Africa on Dec. 26 killing more than 140,000 people. Eighteen Americans have been confirmed dead and more are missing. Former presidents Bush and Clinton are leading the effort to collect donations. The United States has pledged $350 million.

IT SUCKS TO BE A DEMOCRAT

The 109th Congress was sworn in Jan. 4. Vice President Dick Cheney swore in 34 senators, leaving the Republicans with a 55-44-1 majority. The Democrats have their smallest representation in 70 years. In the House of Representatives, Republicans lead 232-201-1.

PALESTINIAN ELECTIONS

Mahmoud Abbas won the presidential election in Palestine with two-thirds of the 1.28 million registered voters. The victory was one for the Palestine Liberation Organization's Fatah movement, which fights for a two-state approach. President Bush invited Abbas to the White House and urged him to bolster security forces against militants.

MURRAY ARRAIGNED

K-State English professor Thomas Murray was arraigned in a Douglas County District Court after a judge ruled there was enough evidence for him to stand trial for the murder of his ex-wife, Carmin Ross. The jury trial is set to start Feb. 14 and is expected to last six weeks.

ICY KANSAS

Kansas ice storms closed K-State and Manhattan schools for two days last week. Kansas City International Airport cancelled flights on Jan. 4 and Jan. 5.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius declared 56 counties in a state of emergency for the storm that was expected to cost Kansas $11 million in damage.

PREGNANT MOTHER KILLED

A Melvern, Kan., woman was accused of strangling a pregnant Missouri woman and cutting her baby from the womb. Lisa Montgomery, 36, was denied bail for the charge of kidnapping resulting in death. The victim, Bobbie Jo Stinnett, 23, was eight months pregnant, and her healthy baby was reunited with the father.

YATES RELEASED

Andrea Yates, who was given a life sentence for drowning her children in a bathtub, had her conviction overturned Thursday. Yates is entitled to a new trial after a judge found a psychiatrist gave false testimony that suggested Yates got the idea from an episode of "Law and Order."

BRAD'S SINGLE AGAIN

The most powerful couple in Hollywood has split after four years of marriage. Brad Pitt and Jennifer Aniston announced their split earlier this week but said they remained friends. People magazine has reported Pitt's desire for children might have pushed Aniston away.

THE NEW TIMES SQUARE

Manhattan kicked off a New Year's celebration into high gear and received national attention. More than 9,000 people attended the celebration, which included a apple dropping at midnight on top of Varney's. TV stations broadcast the celebration live.

DICK CLARK STILL ROCKIN'

TV legend Dick Clark, 75, was hospitalized for a stroke in December, leaving him unable to attend his annual New Year's Eve show on ABC. The show, hosted by Regis Philbin, still attracted 7.9 million viewers, the special's most-watched outing in three years.

Manhattan, county officials continue planning for 150th birthday festival

Planners request help from K-State students for celebration ideas

By Humberto J. Gonzalez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan and Riley County are turning 150 years old this year.

The main celebration for the sesquicentennial will be in City Park on June 4 with the parade starting the festival at 9:30 a.m.

Chair of the Publicity Committee Angie Reed said she hopes to fill City Park with vendors and patrons.

Many of these festivities are not aimed at the student life at K-State, but the Publicity Committee is open for suggestions and opinions, which can be presented at festival meetings, Reed said.

"Student life has been and will continue to be a driving force in the shaping of Manhattan.

Without K-State and Manhattan Christian College, Manhattan would not be the city that it is today," said Cheryl Collins, director of the Riley County Historical Museum.

Collins said it is important to reflect on the past to allow the city to move further into the future.

According to www.celebrate150.org, prior to 1855 Manhattan was originally dubbed Boston, then renamed due to prominent New York investors.

This new Manhattan was first deemed "The Little Apple" in 1977 in reference to the "Big Apple," of New York, according to www.housing.ksu.edu.

Mayor Brad Everett said the celebration is an important event for the community.

"This celebration allows the community to come together as a whole for its past growth and development," he said.

Manhattan train depot restoration project nears full funding

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After nearly a decade of fundraising, a historical Manhattan landmark is closer to getting restored.

Fundraising has entered its last stages for the restoration and preservation of the Union Pacific train depot, located south of Manhattan Town Center.

"We're very close," said Bonnie Lynn-Sherow, committee chair for the Manhattan/Riley County Preservation Alliance.

Karen Davis, director of community development for the city of Manhattan, said most of the project's funds have come through federal grants given to the city by the Kansas Department of Transportation.

KDOT is a 4-1 matching donor for the project, meaning for every $1 donated to the Preservation Alliance and the City of Manhattan, KDOT will donate $4. The city and Preservation Alliance need to raise $156,000 of the $781,000 needed to complete the restoration.

Linda Glasgow, librarian and archivist for the Riley County Historical Museum and member of the Preservation Alliance, said the amount collected so far by the Preservation Alliance totals $129,000, not counting money donated directly to the city.

Davis said the money donated to the project through the KDOT grants has played an important part in restoration fundraising.

"We could not have done this without these funds," Davis said.

Grants also helped fund $40,000 used to make previous outer repairs to the depot, such as stabilizing the foundation, reshingling the roof and replacing broken windows.

The project of restoring the depot began in 1994, shortly after the Preservation Alliance was formed. Dixie West, president of the Preservation Alliance, said members wanted a big project to work on.

West said since the depot is a testament to Manhattan's history and the importance of the railroad in America's development, it seemed like a perfect project.

Glasgow said having the railroad, along with a passenger depot, helped Manhattan grow as a community in its early days.

"In Manhattan's history, having secured the railroad to come through town was extremely important for the vitality of the community," Glasgow said.

Repairs and restoration on both the interior and exterior of the building has yet to be finished.

Outside, the building needs parking lots and handicap-accessible ramps.

There are also plans to rebuild a tower that was part of the original structure of the depot, but was taken down in 1931.

Interior work includes adding a bathroom, lighting and a heating and cooling system. The former passenger room and baggage room will be turned into meeting rooms.

Once finished, the depot will be available for public use. West said the organizations and individuals will be able to use the depot for their functions, such as meetings, receptions and dances.

"We've raised money hoping this building would be used for public purposes," West said.

While the actual restoration of the depot may take a few years to complete, those who have been working on the project for many years are eagerly awaiting its completion.

"We're amazingly excited," Lynn-Sherow said. "I just can't believe it's going to get done.

"It's going to look just like it did when Theodore Roosevelt came here in 1901."

CBS fires 4 staffers after Bush memo investigation

By David Bauder
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CBS issued a damning independent review Monday of mistakes related to last fall's "60 Minutes Wednesday" report on President Bush's National Guard service and fired three news executives and a producer for their "myopic zeal" in rushing it on the air.

The review said CBS compounded the damage with a circle-the-wagons mentality once the report came under fire.

The independent investigators, however, found no evidence of a political bias against Bush.

CBS News President Andrew Heyward and Dan Rather, who announced in November he was stepping down as the anchor of "CBS Evening News," escaped without any disciplinary action. But Rather, who narrated the Sept. 8 story, was criticized by CBS Chief Executive Leslie Moonves for "errors of credulity and over-enthusiasm."

"The system broke down on this one, for sure," said Louis D. Boccardi, retired chief executive officer of The Associated Press, who conducted the investigation along with former Republican Attorney General Dick Thornburgh. They delivered their 224-page report to Moonves last week.

Fired were Mary Mapes, the story's producer; Josh Howard, executive producer of "60 Minutes Wednesday"; Howard's top deputy, Mary Murphy; and CBS News Senior Vice President Betsy West.

The "60 Minutes" story had questioned Bush's Vietnam War-era commitment to service in the Texas Air National Guard. Mapes began reporting the story in 1999, but the report centered on documents obtained only weeks earlier, supposedly written by Bush's commander, the late Lt. Col. Jerry Killian. The memos said Killian reportedly felt pressured to sugarcoat an evaluation of Bush.

Questions were quickly raised about the typed memos, with some document experts saying it appeared they contained a computer character inconsistent with typewriters at the time.

TO THE POINT

Education funding should be legislators' first priority

Education is the future of Kansas and therefore should be the the first priority of the Kansas Legislature.

In her State of the State address Monday, Gov. Kathleen Sebelius set education as well as health care as a top priority. It seems education is promised the funding it needs, yet it never is accomplished.

Lawmakers have until April to devise a fair funding formula for K-12 education. This is the future of our state and cannot be pushed aside.

State universities like K-State are also sharing the burden of a lack of state action. It's time for legislators to put its future first.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR POLICY

The Collegian enthusiastically welcomes letters to the editor. They have an important function as readers' perspectives to the Collegian and provide the opinion page with a variety of views.

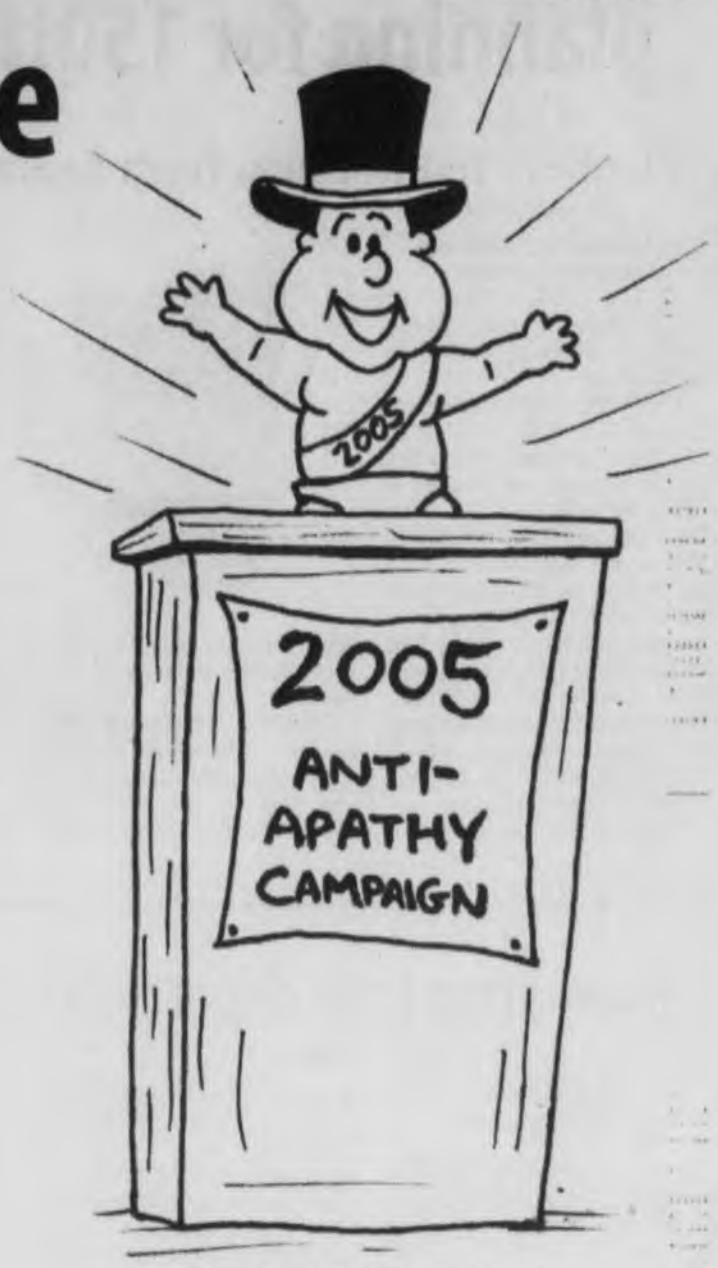
Oftentimes, student and faculty voices are overlooked on campus, and letters to the editor, along with the Campus Fourum, are outlets for everyone's opinions to be heard.

Letters can be hand-delivered to the newsroom by the author. Upon delivery, the author will be asked for photo identification. Letters also can be e-mailed to letters@spub.ksu.edu or mailed to Kedzie 116, c/o Chaz Steimel, opinion editor.

The author's phone number and e-mail address must be included on these submissions but will not be published with the letter. They are required for the opinion editor to contact the author with any questions or comments concerning the letter.

The Collegian reserves the right to edit any letters received for publication. Also, the Collegian does not print every letter it receives.

Letters should be no longer than 400 words. This is to ensure that as many voices as possible are heard.



Remember, the Collegian will not print any comments that are vulgar, obscene or libelous.

Some tips for writing a letter to the editor are:

- Keep your opinions short and concise. Get straight to the point, then elaborate on your thoughts and feelings.
- Keep topics closely related to current events. This will increase your chances for publication.
- Present your view, then offer a solution or suggestion.
- Make your letters about issues, not personalities or personal vendettas.
- Try to offer as many diverse opinions as possible, but be sure to put an interesting spin on your comments.

Vowing to care

Lack of public discourse results in uninformed political decisions

CHAZ STEIMEL

Over the past month, I have had the time to consider a few things. Between determining how many licks it takes to get to the center of a tootsie pop (1,294) and the secret of the universe, I considered an issue that has been plaguing me.

Apathy, my friends. Good old "just don't give a damn" mentality. Now I know more than one pundit and many writers of my own generation have written more brilliant works on this subject, but today I am going to take the time and give my two cents.

Apathy is a plague on both American houses, Republicans and Democrats. For years, my generation's voting rates have been looked down upon, well, because they were low. This past election year, our generation did considerably better.

But, there is still a problem. Many of my friends (and yes, I have them, albeit only three), and many more of my generation often shy away from politics.

Becoming active in politics for an election is a great step, but it is only a first step. Unfortunately, there are more steps we, and I do mean you and I because last I checked you inhabit Earth as well, need to take.

I fear, after so many of my generation actively voted, protested, and for some, even protested the protesters, that we will start forsaking our nation's future once again.

Apathy is a problem. Make no mistake, it saps our civic strength, and my generation's virtue is tarnished.

Voting is only one symptom; lack of civic discourse is a far greater concern. Without public discourse, debate, and shall I say it, compromise, we are doomed as a democracy.

There is more to the collapse of a country than just talking about stuff. And I doubt that America is doomed, although the rise of reality TV does have me concerned.

How many times have members of my generation shrugged away from discussions of current issues? Or how many times have we remarked that the CTBT, WTO, IMF, NATO, ASEAN, ABM, NSA, EU, GOP, UNICEF, UFL-CIO, or the DNC is boring, irrelevant or never even heard of them?

If you did not recognize any of these terms, do not feel bad. But realize these are all important issues or groups, and people should have at least heard of them.

The lack of public discourse does have a negative impact. Initially, without discourse, how can we expect to make informed decisions? Sure, media provides information, but few of my generation take the time to consume the level of news that is necessary to make an informed decision.

Without informed decisions, what good is our democracy? For instance, thousands of years ago a democracy voted to execute its greatest generals right after they saved their city because they left bodies behind.

Now America is not Athens, (which is good because I always felt sorry for Sparta, and I am not moving to Canada), but without discussion and informed decisions are we not a under mob rule?

As we begin our new year, I decided to make myself a New Year's resolution. This year, as I serve as the Collegian's opinion editor, I promise to do my best to provide the most insightful, intelligent and best-informed opinions that I can.

For doing this, I ask nothing. It is not out of ambition or a desire to be editor in chief of this paper. I seek to do this because my generation deserves the best that I can offer – and nothing less.

Asian tsunami disaster highlights heroic relief efforts

JESSE MANNING

As devastating as events like last month's tsunami in South Asia can be, they have the ability to bring out the true goodness of the human spirit, evident through our empathy, compassion and volunteerism.

In the midst of such a disaster, we should all endeavor to recognize the heroic efforts of the thousands of volunteers as well as to lend a hand to their efforts.

As the death toll approaches 160,000, nations across the world are coming together to dedicate unprecedented amounts of money toward relief and reconstruction efforts.

The UN's emergency relief coordinator Jan Egeland recently expressed disbelief at the massive contributions that were flowing in.

"They are coming so often, and they are so big that we really have to confirm that we heard right, that the number of zeroes was right," she said.

Still, the politicization of the tsunami was inevitable. Egeland earlier commented that countries were being "stingy" with their aid, a comment that many U.S. officials took as directed toward America.

The United States quickly noted that it gives more humanitarian aid to nations around the world than anyone else. President Bush also came under fire for being "slow to react," as if his appearance on camera had happened a day earlier that somehow the magnitude of the disaster could have been lessened.

Thankfully, the political nonsense faded away as other nations stepped up to the plate. In addition to the U.S.'s $350 million pledge, a sum that will likely grow to over a billion dollars, Australia, Germany and Japan have promised donations of $764 million, $660 million and $500 million, respectively.

The personal efforts of individual volunteers are even more inspiring. Not only have high-profile celebrities like Sandra Bullock donated vast amounts of money, but everyday individuals are finding a little extra to send to a country they'll never visit, to people they'll never meet, all without the want of reward.

Countless relief workers from dozens of international charity organizations are lending their time and effort to make aid and reconstruction a physical reality.

Their work is the most inspiring, as they've put themselves in dangerous environments not for money, but for their fellow man in need. And that's perhaps the greatest good that comes out of such a severe tragedy like the tsunami and the loss of so much life: the firm resolve of the human spirit shines through and that is a reward in and of itself.

We should recognize the great contributions of these individuals by contributing and supporting them ourselves. Former presidents Bill Clinton and George H. W. Bush have joined together to lead a drive for donations from all Americans.

Clinton was right when he said, "I want people here at home in America and throughout the world to know that if you only have a dollar, $5, $10 to give, if a million of you do, that you'll make a huge difference."

As college students, we might not be able to do much individually, but collectively we can make an impact. Making a contribution of even a few dollars might mean a temporary sacrifice; you might have to forfeit a night in Aggieville, skip a meal or give up driving to campus for a week.

Together, we can perpetuate the good that has come of this disaster and give ourselves the reward of compassion.

Governments and individuals around the world are proving that tragedy has the power to bring out the best in people.

500 transfer students arrive on K-State campus Monday

New Wildcats go through intense orientation sessions

By Andrew Leslie
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The concerns of new students were addressed at the transfer student orientation yesterday.

Transfer student orientation welcomes new freshmen, international students and non-traditional students with children.

During the Wefald administration, K-State has placed more emphasis on welcoming each new class and responding to what students need, said Pat Bosco, dean of student life.

About 500 new students heard an abbreviated form of new student orientation.

It lasted for only a few hours, as opposed to the all-day orientation students enrolling in the fall receive.

It is a more intense orientation that focuses more on getting students enrolled at K-State and less on making a connection with the K-State family, Bosco said.

Transfer student orientation places more emphasis on the practical side of enrolling at K-State and responding to a lot of different needs in a short period of time.

"It's a down and dirty version of the new student orientation," Bosco said.

The College of Business Administration had about 35 students at its orientation and representatives went over the rules and regulations of the college.

They also advised and enrolled the students during the orientation, said Sarah Stephan, College of Business Administration employee.

Bosco said the anxiety of being a new student at K-State can cause a lot of stress and the transfer student orientation attempted to alleviate those concerns.

Many students and faculty members were on hand to listen and respond to the needs of the new students.

Shainay Harper, incoming freshman, said the orientation was a success.

"The orientation was very thorough and eased a lot of my apprehensions about being at K-State," she said.

Students look to Internet to save on books

By Matthew Peterworth
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More and more students are looking to the Internet to save money on textbooks.

Various Web sites offer alternatives to Varney's Book Store in Aggieville. Varney's also operates the K-State Student Union Bookstore.

A local website has sprung up in the past year for students, KSUBooks.com. With over a thousand users, KSUBooks.com is essentially a forum for students to post old textbooks they would like to sell.

The primary advantage this site has over national Web sites is that students can meet up with the seller and see the book before they pay for it. The overall cost can be cheaper because there are no shipping costs.

Elizabeth Kuzila, sophomore in apparel marketing and design, said that she has been to KSUBooks.com.

"When I go about purchasing and selling books in a student to student manner, I usually just do so amongst friends," Kuzila said.

Rather than buying books from people at K-State, national Web sites offer students the ability to buy and sell books with students at other campuses.

Lester Stone, sophomore in open-option, has purchased books from Half.com, which is part of eBay. Other national Web sites like Amazon.com and Walmart.com also sell textbooks.

CampusBooks.com offers a comprehensive search of all booksellers on the Internet, including those mentioned above. It ranks the results by price, including shipping.

The main advantage this site has over local outlets is book availability. If Varney's has run out of used copies of a book, a used copy can usually be found online. The main risk students run into is not being able to return books purchased online if they turn out to be incorrect.

The surest way to search for a textbook online is by International Standard Book Number, or ISBN. The only way to obtain the ISBN of the book the teacher adopted, besides talking to the teacher, is to go into Varney's and look on the book itself. If the book is out of stock, it leaves the student with only a title and author but no edition number or ISBN.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Lauren Hensley, sophomore in mass communications, looks through books Monday morning in the K-State Student Union Bookstore. Hensley expects to pay about $400 for books.

Some colleges, such as St. Louis Community College, have public textbook lists that allow students to look up the ISBN online. This would ensure that the students order the exact books they need.

Brett Beem, co-creator of KSUBooks.com, said a textbook list needs to be posted by the university.

"If the university really cared about the students, they would have a public textbook list to help students save money," Beem said.

Mudslides destroy California neighborhoods

By Laura Wides
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES – A huge mudslide furiously crashed down on homes in a coastal hamlet Monday as a deadly Pacific storm hammered Southern California for a fourth straight day, boosting rainfall totals to astonishing levels.

At least one person died and several were injured in the mudslide that pummeled a four-block area of homes in tiny La Conchita, damaging 15 to 20 homes, said Ventura County Fire Department spokesman Tom Kruschke. That brought the death toll in California from the storms to 10.

The hillside cascaded down like a brown river as authorities were evacuating about 200 residents from near the unstable area. Trees and vegetation were carried away, leaving huge gashes of raw earth on the bluff.

Search and rescue teams were dispatched to look for anyone who may have been buried.

La Conchita is a slip of a town pressed between a highway and a towering coastal bluff northwest of Los Angeles.

The death toll from the storms also includes a 2-year-old girl who slipped from her mother's grasp as rescuers tried to hoist them from a car submerged on a road outside Los Angeles. Avalanches killed two people in Utah and one in Nevada.

From the start of the latest wave of violent weather on Friday through midday Monday, several mountainous areas in Southern California had recorded more than 20 inches of rain, including 26 inches in Nordhoff Ridge in the Ventura County mountains.

The rain comes on the heels of stormy weather that blasted the state earlier in the week.

The average amount of winter rainfall in downtown Los Angeles is 15 inches, but about 21 inches had fallen as of Monday, including a Jan. 9 record of 2.6 inches, said National Weather Service meteorologist Bruce Rockwell.

Familiar faces

K-State focuses on fundamentals when facing Missouri tonight

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When K-State hosts Missouri tonight, one face in the Tigers' lineup will be very familiar to most of the Wildcat players.

Missouri sophomore Tiffany Brooks wore a K-State uniform before transferring to the Tigers at semester break last season.

Now, as the Tigers' leading scorer at 15.4 points per game, Brooks returns to Manhattan for the first time since leaving the Wildcats.

Sophomore Twiggy McIntyre said she will approach the game like any other, and that includes viewing Brooks as an opponent rather than an old teammate.

"I'm going to look at her like I do every other opponent out on the court," McIntyre said. "I heard she is doing very well. I am very proud of her accomplishments, but when she steps on the court and we step on the court against her, she is an opponent. We won't look at her as a past teammate or anything like that."

Coach Deb Patterson said she hasn't reflected on the idea of going against one of her former players.

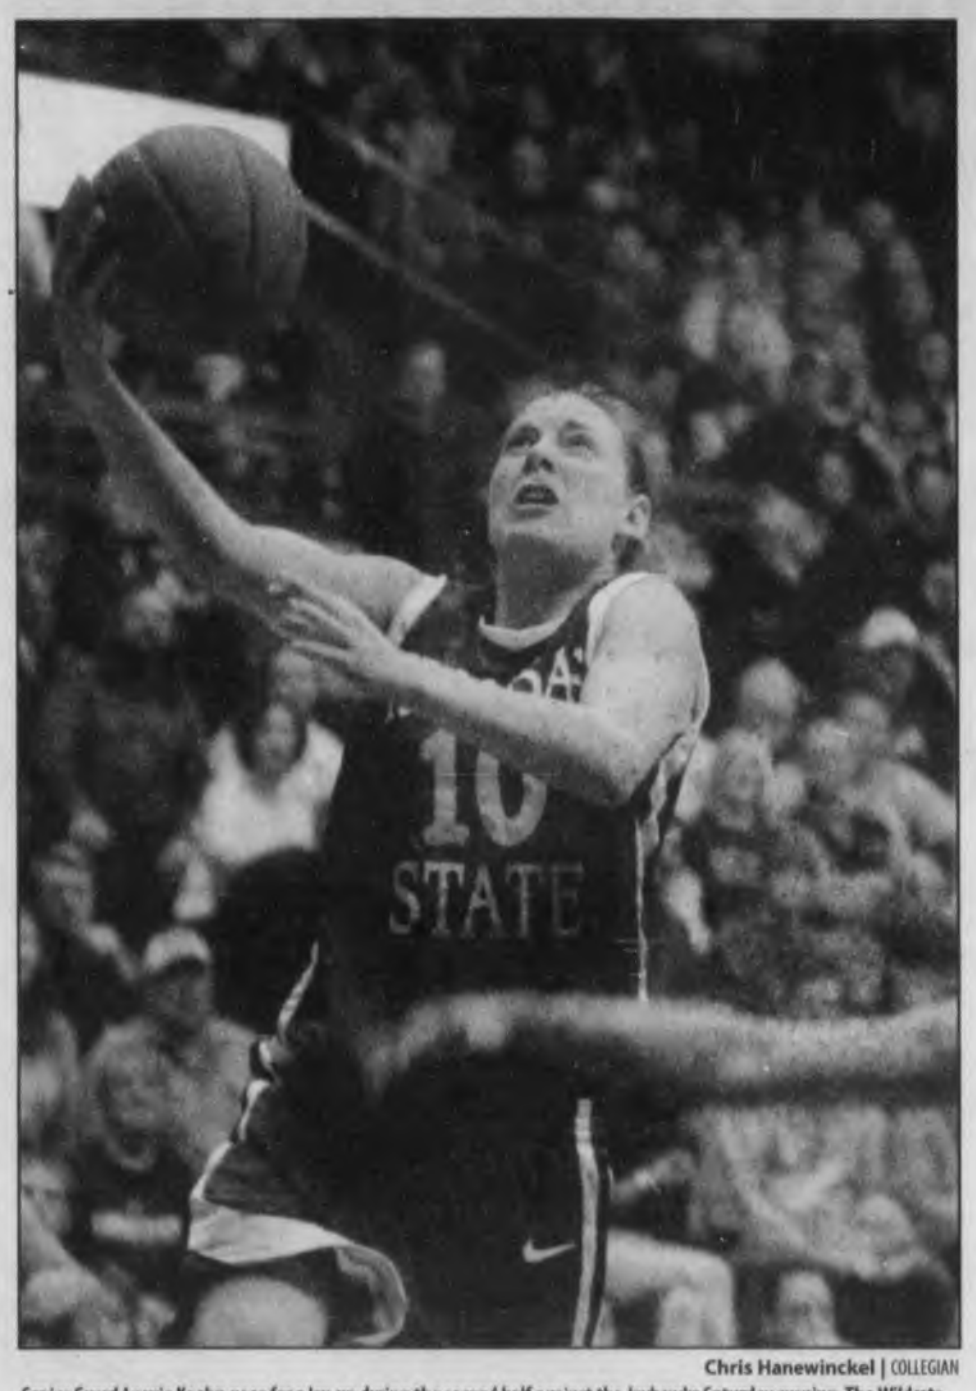
"I don't have a lot of preoccupation with anything except Missouri as a whole," Patterson said. "It's all about us defending Missouri and us executing against Missouri, and beyond that, I don't really give it much thought."

The game against the Tigers (7-6, 1-1) begins a three-game homestand for K-State (10-3, 1-1) – a welcome break from the past month when the Wildcats were on the road for six of their last seven games.

Senior Megan Mahoney said playing in front of the Bramlage Coliseum crowd is something the Wildcats always look forward to.

"I think I speak for the team when I say we are definitely excited to be home, and it's always great to come back and play on your home court in front of our great fans," Mahoney said.

The Wildcats may need the support of the home crowd, as Missouri is expected to start three 6-foot-3 players. The Wildcats have struggled against taller lineups this season.



Mahoney said the Wildcats will need to play fundamentally sound in order to counter the Tigers' height advantage.

"They have a lot of big bodies," Mahoney said. "A lot of big posts that we're going to have to deal with. We just need to dig in on defense and we can't foul and put them to the line. They are going to come out fighting and we need to do the same thing."

Wildcat women prevail against KU in weekend competition

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE – Just like the previous three trips to Allen Fieldhouse, No. 22 K-State came away with another rout over in-state rival Kansas, as the Wildcats rolled the Jayhawks 63-45 Saturday night.

The win marked the seventh straight win over Kansas.

The Wildcats have dominated the Jayhawks during that time, winning by an average of 25 points per game.

But for the first 20 minutes Saturday, the Jayhawks found a way to make the Wildcat fans in attendance nervous.

Tempered by the sharp-shooting of Kansas junior Kaylee Brown, who connected on three of five three-pointers in the first half, K-State (10-3) went into halftime in a 26-26 tie with Kansas (7-6).

Sophomore Claire Coggins said both teams played intense basketball, and it took some time for the Wildcats to adjust.

"(Kansas) smelled blood," Coggins said. "They wanted us. They came out extremely hard, but I'm really proud of our defense and our counter attack on their offense.

"Sometimes, it takes a little while to adjust to the team that you are playing."

Senior Kendra Wecker ended all thoughts of a Jayhawk upset when she sparked a 17-3 K-State run with three straight baskets to open the second half.

Wecker scored 12 of her 18 points in the second half to end with 11 rebounds, which gave her 41 career double-doubles.

Wecker said the second-half turnaround was a team effort.

"Defensively, we didn't play very well in the first half, and the offense was so-so, but I think in the second half, everyone turned things around," Wecker said.

"Defensively, we got really fired up and aggressive, and offensively, we executed, we got some transition points, and we were able to break them down a little bit."

Freshman Shana Wheeler was another bright spot for K-State in the second half. Her defense helped keep Crystal Kemp, Kansas' leading scorer, to just 10 points.

Senior Laurie Koehn said Wheeler's defensive presence helped keep Kansas out of rhythm.

"Shana was incredible tonight," Koehn said.

K-State men's team experiences loss on, off the court

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the 11 days of this new year, the K-State men's basketball team has arguably experienced several months worth of drama both on and off the court.

The Wildcats' 95-85 double-overtime loss at Nebraska Saturday capped off an eventful week for the squad that included a key injury to senior forward Jeremiah Massey, an attack on freshmen guards Clent Stewart and Curtis Allen and unrest between junior forward Marques Hayden and Coach Jim Wooldridge.

Sophomore guard Lance Harris, who hit a 3-pointer that sent the Nebraska game into a second overtime, said the Wildcats – still off to their best 12-game start since 1998-99 at 10-2 – have plenty left in the tank as they prepare to face Texas Tech at 7 p.m. on Wednesday at Bramlage Coliseum.

"I don't think we're too drained," Harris said. "We had our heads down, but we have to pick them back up because we have to come back out and play again on Wednesday."

The week began Jan. 3 with an 80-58 win over Central Missouri State at Bramlage, which on paper, looked like a standard romp over a Division-II opponent.

It wasn't.

Hayden was suspended for the game after making comments to the media questioning the offense and his role on the team following a win over Eastern Illinois on Dec. 30.

Then, with seven minutes remaining in the second half against CMSU, Massey – the team's leading scorer and rebounder – sprained his right ankle and had to be helped to the locker room.

The week only got worse for the Wildcats, as Stewart and Allen were assaulted and robbed at gunpoint on the night of Jan. 5.

The pair was returning to the Ramada Plaza Hotel, their place of residence over the holiday break, when they were mugged in the hotel's parking lot.

According to the police report, Allen was able to get away and call the police, but Stewart was struck in the back of the head by one of the two assailants in the incident.

Still, Hayden, Massey, Stewart and Allen all took the floor Saturday against the Cornhuskers in both schools' Big 12 Conference opener.

Hayden and Stewart started, and Massey played significant minutes off the bench, even though Wooldridge said last season's Big 12 Newcomer of the Year did not practice all week and was 80 percent healthy for the game.

Massey had 12 points and three rebounds against the Cornhuskers.

Sophomore forward Cartier Martin, who led the team with a career-high 23 points, said Massey's performance was impressive in light of the injury.

"Jeremiah played well tonight fighting through the injury that he had," Martin said. "It was rough on him. Him getting out there and still playing shows his toughness and how well he wants the team to do."

Hayden struggled shooting in his return, going 4-of-12, but did contribute 10 points and six rebounds. Stewart scored 5 points – three coming on a perimeter jumper that cut the Husker lead to 56-54 with less than eight minutes left in the second half.

Though each significant Wildcat contributor was able to take the floor, the effects of the hectic week might have shown in the second overtime, as the Wildcats were outscored 15-5.

Collegian sports page adds new features to better serve you, the readers

It's time to start a new semester of sports here at K-State which means new hope, new optimism and new expectations.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

As you return to campus, you will notice some good things are happening with our Wildcat sports teams.

The men's basketball team is off to its best start since the 1998-99 season, as they have posted a 10-2 record so far.

Even though K-State lost a hard-fought, double-overtime game to Nebraska in open-league play, students should still support this team more than ever.

The women's basketball team is coming off another demolition of in-state rival Kansas, and the Wildcats have now won six of their last seven games.

The return of Kendra Wecker after her ankle injury has propelled the Wildcats into a productive rhythm, and K-State seems to be finding its groove.

The indoor track season is in full swing, and the team is prepping to make a run at the Big 12 Championship.

Rovelto's team has looked strong against early season competition, thanks in part to All-American Kyle Lancaster in the high jump and Breanna Eveland in the pole vault.

So with all of this going on, I'd like to present to you some new things you can expect from the Collegian sports team.

While still in the planning stages, we are working closely with the K-State Athletic Department to get a full page of the paper for each men's basketball game that reads "Beat Tech," "Beat KU," or whichever opponent the Wildcats will face.

If it happens, students can hold this page up at the games, and it will be a great way to provide a simple yet powerful way for the students to visually show their support for the team.

There will also be a renewed focus on the intramural and club sports on campus.

After all, the Collegian is for all students.

Finally, the sports page will be more fun to read, thanks to some additions.

After basketball games on Saturdays, check the Collegian Web site, www.kstatecollegian.com, to see a post-game wrap-up.

Hopefully, these new features will upgrade the quality of the sports page, and it will be the first page you turn to every day.

Michael is a junior in mass communications. Please send comments to sports@spub.ksu.edu.

WBB | Marysville to retire Wecker's jersey Friday

K-State senior All-American Kendra Wecker will have her jersey retired during a ceremony at her high school in Marysville, Kan. on Friday, Jan. 14.

Wecker

Wecker played at Marysville High School from 1997-2001.

During that time she was named the USA TODAY Kansas Player of the Year, Miss Kansas Basketball, Gatorade Kansas Player of the Year, and Kansas Sports Hall of Fame Player of the Year.

She finished her high school career with 2,305 points, which ranks sixth all-time in Kansas girls basketball history.

Wecker was also the first girl in Kansas basketball history to record 2,000 points and 1,000 rebounds in a career.

The preseason Big 12 Player of the Year, Wecker currently leads the league in scoring at 20.7 points per game, and she is the K-State leader in career double-doubles with 40.

NFL | Peyton Manning wins second straight MVP award

INDIANAPOLIS - Peyton Manning's phenomenal season earned him his second straight Associated Press NFL Most Valuable Player Award. He was nearly a unanimous choice.

Manning

The Indianapolis Colts' star quarterback, who surpassed Dan Marino and Steve Young with his passing prowess in 2004, earned all but one of 48 votes from a national panel of sports writers and broadcasters who cover pro football.

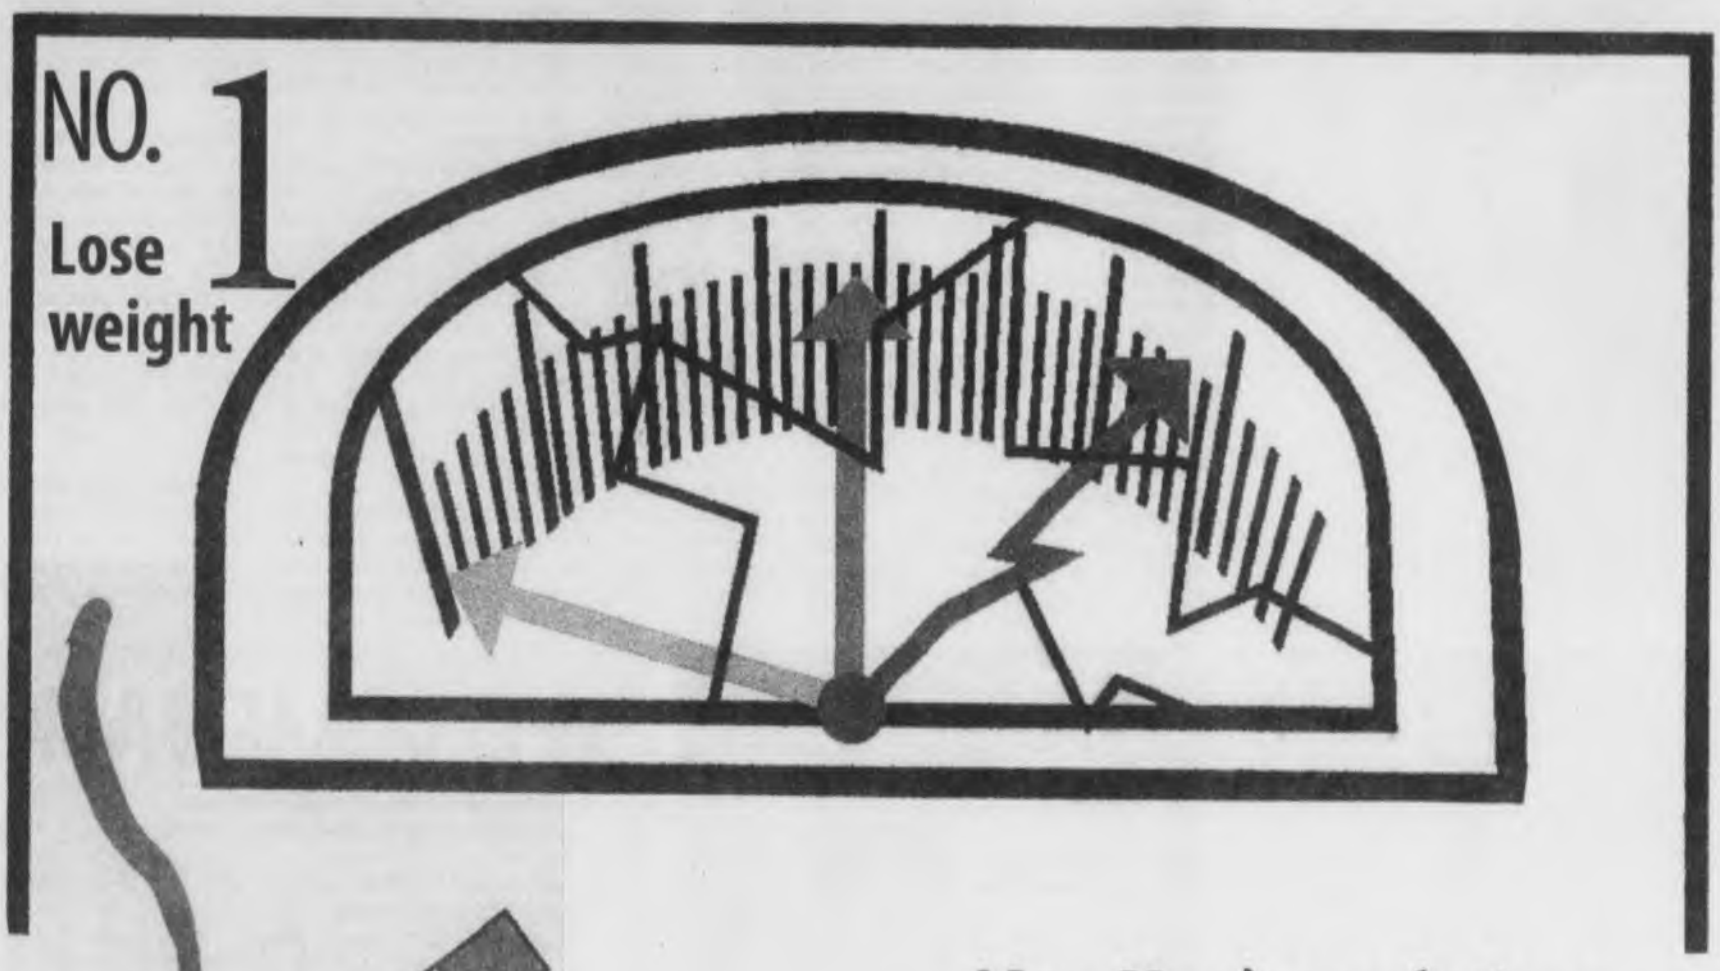
Manning tied with Steve McNair for the award last season, but this time only Atlanta quarterback Michael Vick drew a vote.

Manning joined the likes of Joe Montana, John Unitas, Steve Young and Kurt Warner as quarterbacks with two MVP awards. Brett Favre is the only player to win it three times.

NFL | Moss likely to be fined

NEW YORK - Randy Moss is almost sure to be fined for pretending to moon fans in Green Bay during a playoff win, according to NFL rules.

Moss



When asked whether the oft-fined Moss would be penalized again, a league spokesman recited NFL rules mandating discipline for "obscene gestures or other actions construed as being in poor taste."

A fine for the first offense under those guidelines is $5,000.

New Year's resolutions attainable if realistic goals are set, mistakes expected

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the new year blows in with a shower of confetti and noise-makers, people are once again pulling out their New Year's resolutions.

Whether it be to lose weight or to actually start going to class, making and keeping a resolution is a combination of hard work and desire to change.

The desire to keep her lungs healthy is why Monica Wescott made the ever-popular resolution to stop smoking.

Wescott, senior in political science, said a couple of her friends are quitting together, which gives her more motivation to stick to her resolution.

"I've tried to quit a couple of times," Wescott said. "I feel like if I tell people about it, then I'll be held accountable and that will help me keep my resolution."

Erica Wenger agreed and said having people know your resolution gives you more motivation to stick to it.

Wenger, junior in elementary education, said she plans to keep her resolution of not wearing flip flops in the winter with some help from her roommate.

"I told her because she'll yell at me if I wear them outside and make me go change," Wenger said.

Having a support group isn't the only way to keep resolutions. In an article in Psychology Today, Dr. Timothy Pychyl, associate professor of psychology at Carleton University in Ottawa, offered several other tips to keep from breaking those New Year's resolutions.

One way is for people to make a resolution that revolves around changing something that is meaningful to them. If the resolution focuses on something important to them, they will be more likely to actively try to change and will have more desire to keep the resolution.

"We should expect to fail at self-regulation at times."

Dr. Timothy Pychyl
ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF PSYCHOLOGY AT CARLETON UNIVERSITY IN OTTAWA

A second tip Pychyl gave was to make goals attainable and to lay out an easy-to-follow plan. Having steps to follow makes it easier for people to get into their new and improved habits.

Having a plan will also make it easier for people to pick up where they left off if they fall off course.

Pychyl's third tip was for people to give themselves a little breathing room when it comes to how hard they are on themselves if they mess up.

"We should expect to fail at self-regulation at times," Pychyl said. "What you really have to guard against is what is formally know as 'the what-the-hell-effect.'"

Pychyl is referring to what happens when people mess up just a little bit. They get down on themselves, say "what the hell" and give up altogether. Pychyl said it is better to allow for some mistakes and keep on going with the resolution.

For people who are really afraid of personal failure, they can always do what Amy Koehne is doing, which is nothing at all.

"I made a resolution not to make a resolution," Koehne, sophomore in pre-natal hygiene, said. "Nobody ever keeps them."

Hilary Duff to aid tsunami relief efforts

NEW YORK — Teen actress-singer Hilary Duff is donating a portion of all ticket sales from her sold-out "Most Wanted" tour to aid tsunami relief efforts.

Duff

"I, just like everyone else, have watched this terrible tragedy and feel so sorry for the children and the families who have lost so much," Duff said in a statement Monday. "I want to do everything I can to help those that have survived."

Duff, 17, will give the money to Kids With a Cause, which helps children who suffer from poverty, lack of education, abandonment, neglect and abuse.

First Lady sizes up inaugural ball gown

NEW YORK — The full-length wrap gown that Laura Bush intends to wear to the inaugural ball will be classic and elegant but "with a touch of shimmer and shine," according to designer Oscar de la Renta. "It's right for the occasion," he said Monday.

The first lady had her fitting for the grayish-blue dress on Saturday at de la Renta's Manhattan showroom.

"Meet the Fockers" reigns for 3rd consecutive week

LOS ANGELES — "Meet the Fockers" ruled the North American box office for a third consecutive weekend, speeding past the $200 million mark, while the first wide release of 2005 opened strongly at No. 2.

Stiller

According to studio estimates issued on Sunday, the Ben Stiller-Robert De Niro (news) comedy sold $28.5 million worth of tickets in the three days beginning on Friday, taking its total to $204.3 million.

It ranks as the sixth-highest-grossing film released in 2004, according to box office tracking firm Exhibitor Relations.

People's Choice honors what critics didn't

PASADENA, Calif. — Two hit films that have been snubbed this awards season in Hollywood snared top People's Choice honors on Sunday as anti-Bush documentary "Fahrenheit 9/11" was named best film and "The Passion of The Christ" best film drama.

In television categories, sensation "Desperate Housewives" was the top new drama and "Joey," starring former "Friends" star Matt LeBlanc, was best new comedy. "Will & Grace" and "CSI: Crime Scene Investigation" earned honors.

'The Aviator' soars with exciting moments

"The Aviator"
Movie review by J. Scott Bowman

Martin Scorsese's latest movie "The Aviator" reveals the complicated life of Howard Hughes.

Scorsese shows Hughes, brilliantly played by Leonardo DiCaprio, as the eccentric man who had the determination to push the limits.

Scorsese presents Hughes not as a lunatic, which many remember him as, but as an entrepreneur, and most importantly, as a real human being.

The movie follows Hughes, who inherited his father's tool business, through his constant personal and business struggles to become a billionaire tycoon.

Scorsese creates a believable world, that looks, sounds, and almost feels, smells and tastes like the 20s, 30s and 40s. The club scenes at the Coconut Grove seem happening, the flying scenes are thrilling and the characters, as well as the dialogue, all seem vintage–so much so, one might question if Scorsese owns a time machine.

The movie starts off as Hughes is creating his epic "Hell's Angels," investing a portion of his inheritance and his time. This was the first of many of Hughes' ventures that reveal his meticulous nature and obsession of his final product.

Hughes then ventures into designing aircraft, creating more movies and wooing Katharine Hepburn, played by Cate Blanchett, all the while battling against his obsessive compulsive disorder which eventually leads him into isolation.

Scorsese also tracks Hughes through his battles for the commercial skies against Pan Am executive Juan Trippe, played by Alec Baldwin. Scorsese even included Hughes' hearings with Senator Ralph Owen Brewster, played by Alan Alda, which were some of the most emotionally exciting scenes of the movie.

DiCaprio does an outstanding job bringing the screen to life by fully immersing himself into his character. Facial expressions, nervous ticks and body language all bring Hughes to the screen as a real man, and not some caricature.

Blanchett does an equally great job at bringing a young "Kate" Hepburn to the screen. She complements DiCaprio's eccentric Hughes by being the free-spirited young woman.

Along with great support from John C. Reilly and Kate Beckinsale, the acting is outstanding, and one must wonder how many nominations "The Aviator" will receive come Oscar-time.

"The Aviator" is very dramatic, but has plenty of funny and exciting moments.

The movie is little long, but is definitely worth the wait. Despite its length, "The Aviator" has a little bit of everything for everyone and is a must-see for any movie-lover.

Junior pole vaulter sets new record, leads team at K-State invitational

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The track and field teams competed for the first time in 2005 as they were host to the K-State Invitational at Ahearn Field House this weekend.

The invitational was highlighted by a strong performance from junior K-State pole vaulter Breanna Eveland.

Eveland set a new K-State Invitational record, which she previously held, as well as a new Ahearn Field House record with a vault of 13-05 1/4.

"I'm pretty excited about breaking the record," Eveland said. "Coach (Rovelto) has a really strong program that we work through. Just working through the coaching program is making me better."

Eveland said she was disappointed about missing the last height, which would have gotten her an automatic bid into the NCAA Championships.

"I was really wanting to be automatic going into the NCAA Championships," Eveland said. "It would have taken some of the pressure off."

On Dec. 11 at the K-State All-Comers meet, she qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championships with a vault of 13-03 1/2, which was previously the best mark at Ahearn.

Head coach Cliff Rovelto is optimistic about seeing Eveland achieve her personal best this early in the season.

"At this point in the year she is much better than she was a year ago at this time," Rovelto said. "These heights will become more routine for her as the year goes on."

For the women, other event champions over the weekend were sophomore Monique Coleman in the 60-meter dash, sophomore Shunte Thomas in the 400-meter dash, freshman Morgan Bonds in the 600-yard run, sophomore Lindsay Grigoriev in the shot put, redshirt freshman Laci Heller in the weight throw and the 4x400-meter relay team.

Rovelto said the women show a lot of promise for the season ahead.

"Not a lot of people competed in their events," Rovelto said. "They still showed much improvement even though that's not something that shows up in the final results."

On the men's side, the Wildcats captured eight event titles.

The K-State men dominated the field events as they brought in titles in all six events.

Junior Coby Cost led the way in the weight throw with a mark of 68-02 1/2. Cost's throw was just four inches short of breaking his own school record of 68-06 1/2 set during the K-State Open in 2003. Cost also won the shot put with a hurl of 54-01 3/4.

Rovelto said he was pleased with Cost's showing.

"Coby threw very well for this early in the year and he will only get better as the year goes on," Rovelto said.

Other K-State champions in the men's events on Saturday were senior Trevor Smith in the 3,000-meter run, junior Kyle Lancaster in the high jump, sophomore Bryce Bergman in the pole vault, junior Stelios Kapsalis in the long jump, sophomore Isäac Fakasiieiki in the triple jump and the 4x400-meter relay team.

With the new year just beginning, Rovelto said he is optimistic about the direction his team is headed.

"We potentially have a very good team," Rovelto said.

The Wildcats will return to Ahearn Field House next weekend to host the Wildcat Invitational and the Wildcat Pentathlon and Heptathlon.

Palestinian presidential candidate Mahmoud Abbas celebrates his campaign with a supporter after the close of voting in the West Bank city of Ramallah. Abbas, a Palestinian moderate aiming to talk peace with Israel, was on course for a landslide victory in an election for a successor to Yasser Arafat Sunday, exit polls showed.

Bush demands newly elected Palestinian leader address terror

By Barry Schweid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – President Bush offered Monday to meet at the White House with newly elected Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas, putting out a welcome mat that was never there for Yasser Arafat.

Bush also congratulated Abbas in a telephone call and said, according to a spokesman, that he envisioned "a day when he and president-elect Abbas and Israel's leaders could stand together and say, 'We have peace'."

Still, Bush gave no sign that he was relenting in the demands he had made of Abbas' late predecessor – that the Palestinian leader fight terror against Israel and put together a strong security system to support that stance.

Proposals by Europeans and others that Bush jumped in quickly to press for an Israeli rollback on the West Bank apparently did not impress the administration, despite the emergence of a Palestinian leader who has called for an end to the violent uprising against Israel.

British Prime Minister Tony Blair's offer during a visit to Ramallah to host a one-day Mideast conference did draw support from the administration as a way to promote Palestinian democracy.

Bush is hopeful the conference will help inspire democratic change within the Palestinian movement, said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Still in place after Sunday's election is the U.S.-backed "roadmap" for peacemaking, which former American mediator Dennis B. Ross said could be a vehicle for progress if more of its principles were implemented.

These include Palestinian arrests of violent militants and the elimination of illegal Israeli outposts on the West Bank, Ross said at the Washington Institute for Near East Policy.

Israeli leaders have welcomed Abbas' victory but have also said they will watch closely how hard he tries to subdue militants.

Italy bans smoking in public spaces; smokers claim violation of rights

By Aidan Lewis
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Office workers took their cigarette breaks on the street Monday after a strict law banning smoking in bars, restaurants, offices and other public spaces came into force in Italy.

The law, which bans smoking in indoor spaces unless they have a separate area with continuous floor-to-ceiling walls and a ventilation system, is one of the toughest in Europe.

Among those fuming at the legislation are bar and restaurant owners who say the new rules will deter clients and that they don't have the time or money to create sealed-off smoking areas.

They also have protested a provision requiring them to report on customers who flout the law, saying it is not their job to act as "sheriffs."

Some smokers claim the new rules curb individual rights.

In Milan, an organization called "Polite Smokers" threw a party in Milan, titled "The Last Cigarette," to protest the law as it came into force.

However, some have raised concerns about whether the law will be applied. In Rome, consumer group Codacons announced a lunchtime blitz of restaurants to check that the new rules were being enforced.

In a bar in central Rome, waitress Giorgia Pasqualetti complained about having to step onto the street whenever she wanted a smoke.

"Now when I take a break, I risk catching a cold," she said. "We do not have the space to create a separate smoking room, so the only way to enjoy a cigarette is outside."

Smokers ignoring the ban face fines of up to $363, while owners of premises risk penalties as high as $2,904.

The law, approved in 2003, was to have gone into effect in December, but an extension was granted through the holiday period. Bars and restaurants lobbied for more time to prepare no-smoking zones but have been denied.

The autonomous province of Bolzano, which has broad powers outside central government control, delayed the law's introduction until July to give restaurants and bars longer to create no-smoking zones, the ANSA news agency said.

According to the Health Ministry figures, about 26 percent of Italians are smokers.

Man sues local news media after BTK reference

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA – A man whose arrest on minor charges sparked speculation of a possible link to the BTK serial killings has sued three media outlets, including The Associated Press, alleging they defamed him in their reporting.

His arrest was triggered by a BTK-related tip in which police discovered outstanding warrants for trespassing and housing violations.

Roger Valadez, who filed the lawsuit, told KAKE television in an interview Monday he thinks about the incident all the time: "People were looking at me. People were staring at me."

The lawsuit names as defendants Emmis Communications, which operates the KSN group of stations, including KSNW-TV in Wichita and KSNT-TV in Topeka; Journal Communications Inc. and Journal Broadcasting Group of Kansas, which owns Wichita's KFDI-FM radio station; and the AP, according to a copy of a draft petition of the lawsuit.

In his petition, Valadez is seeking in excess of $75,000.

The lawsuit alleges the defendants broadcast his name, address and information about his family on Dec. 1 and 2 on television, radio and the Internet.

"We haven't been served and haven't seen the complaint and therefore can't comment," said Dave Tomlin, AP's assistant general counsel.

None of the media outlets had been served with the lawsuit.

high-density complexes.

"Older obsolete structures that have really served their purpose are being replaced by higher density living structures," he said. "It didn't really function as a single-family residential anymore."

Fourie said there are also design standards that need to be followed for new structures, so they fit in with the area.

Marlene Irvine, of Aggie Villas, said she didn't have any problem filling the nine two- and three-bedroom apartments that opened Jan. 1.

She said all of her tenants are K-State students, and they either came from the residence halls or are transfer students.

Shanna Clark, manager of Chase Manhattan Apartments, said although there are more apartment complexes being built closer to campus, it won't affect business.

"We've always had 100 percent occupancy, so I don't think that will be a problem," she said.

Fourie said he agreed.

"There was such a real shortage for housing we don't foresee it will negatively affect housing that is further away," he said. "We just think this is providing greater choice and meeting the needs of the community."

Nick Dreiling and his father, Jeff Dreiling, move a mattress up the stairs of Aggie Villas on Bluemont Ave. Nick and his roommate will split the $700 rent cost and utilities during their six-month lease.

and ask for it."

Johnson said they also will continue offering concerts once a month, saying that he and Shannon felt it was something the customers liked and wanted to see continued.

One of the biggest changes is students 18 and over will be able to get in to Longhorn's, something they weren't able to do at Shotz.

Cover for those under 21 will be $5, and $2 for those 21 and over every Wednesday, Friday and Saturday.

So far, the reaction from partons to Longhorn's return has been positive.

Shannon said he thought people were grateful to have a country bar in Aggieville again.

"There's been numerous people who've come up to us since we've opened and thanked us for opening the place back up, because they needed a place to go," Shannon said.

Williams agreed, saying she has heard positive things about the club's return.

"A lot of the people that come in are the people who came in when it was Longhorn's before," Williams said.

"They're just happy to have their bar back."

STATE | Health care, education top priorities

Some Republicans said they wanted more specifics, particularly on schools.

"I think a leader should set out their goals, and we would work toward meeting them," said Sen. Karin Brownlee, R-Olathe. "I think her goals are a mystery. If we were following her roadmap, we'd be lost."

The governor said she is willing to work with legislators to develop a multiyear package including greater scrutiny of school districts' spending.

"These are exciting times, with great opportunities to be grasped," she said.

"And we must reach for these opportunities with an optimistic, productive and bipartisan approach that serves the interests of all Kansans."

The governor also promoted her $50 million proposal to expand health coverage to as many as 100,000 Kansans, financed by a 50-cent-per-pack increase in the cigarette tax.

Curbing health care costs will help maintain sound state finances and continue the state's economic recovery, Sebelius said.

K-State freshman killed in car accident

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State student was killed during winter break.

Christopher Camarena, K-State freshman in mechanical engineering, was killed in a car accident on Dec. 17.

Camarena, 18, was home for break in Overland Park, Kan., and died after losing control of his Acura Integra on Antioch Road in Johnson County.

A campus memorial will be planned pending a request for one by both the family and friends of Camarena, Heather Reed, assistant director of the Office of Student Life, said.

"We have been waiting for the students' return to see what service they would like. We want to follow their lead and want to provide any type of memorial that is helpful to the students and help them through this," Reed said.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said each death of a student is responded to quickly by the university because of the effect each student has on others.

"We are tragically affected by the death of students," Bosco said. "The circle becomes exceptionally wide and we take the lead of the family whether they'd like to have support or a service from the campus."

Bruce Schrotberger, family friend of Camarena, said Camarena's father

Tsunami disaster hits close to home

By Annie M. Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stories swarm across campus of narrow escapes and miraculous avoidances of the coastal areas affected by the tsunami tragedy.

Zelia Holloway, assistant dean and director in the Office of Diversity Programs, said she has close friends in Sri Lanka she is still worried about.

She visited Colombo, Sri Lanka, in 1992 and worked for the United States Agency for International Development and made strong relationships with people.

The day before the tsunami hit, Holloway read a Christmas card from Jennifer deFonseka from Sri Lanka, and communicated with her via the Internet.

"I wasn't crying I was numb."

Zelia Holloway
ASSISTANT DEAN AND DIRECTOR, OFFICE OF DIVERSITY PROGRAMS

"They treated me like family," she said. "Whenever they had holidays and I was alone, they would take me in."

Holloway was in Ft. Worth, Texas, when she heard the news on CNN.

"I wasn't crying, I was numb," she said. "It was hard knowing that I can't do anything but pray."

Hanas Cader, graduate student in agricultural economics, instantly called his family from Sri Lanka when he heard.

He said he immediately phoned his wife and the other three families he knew in Manhattan from Sri Lanka.

"I was worried about my brother on the island because his job requires him to travel all over Sri Lanka," he said.

With a smile, Cader said, "My entire family is OK."

He said he heard the news on the morning of Dec. 26 and was very relieved to talk to his mother that evening.

Cader said his friend, Wijith Munasinghe, marginally escaped

Beginning at noon today, students can take advantage of a new service reserved exclusively for K-State students.

The Wildcat Information Network allows students to post messages for others to read, search for jobs, create calendars of events and read other students' articles on student life.

"It's going to provide a lot of services that students have wanted and needed for a long time," Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said. "It's student-centered, but not academically related – it's going to link students together, like an online community for students."

Student organizations may find the service useful to plan upcoming events or announcements.

"We'd use it," Michelle Kramer, junior in agricultural economics and president of the KSU Rugby Club, said. "We play both

Gay marriage amendment vote expected

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The proposed amendment to the Kansas Constitution banning gay marriage that failed in the house in May, could be approved by the Senate Thursday.

Senate Majority Leader Derek Schmidt said the issue is is ready for a vote.

"It's consumed an enormous amount of time last session, and it's an issue that is ready to be voted on," he said.

Schmidt said debate on the proposal was scheduled to take place Thursday, and if the vote isn't taken that day, it will be taken on Friday.

The proposal denies legal benefits to marriages of the same sex.

Josh Adams, senior in secondary math education and vice president of Queer-Straight Alliance, said he opposes the proposal.

"As a gay Kansan, I think it's ridiculous and inappropriate for any form of government to limit the rights of an individual or any particular group," he said. "Denying gay marriage is the same thing as denying inter-racial marriage."

A Kansas law adopted in 1996 already states that marriage in Kansas is valid between one man and one woman, so some question the role of the proposed amendment.

"This proposal serves no purpose, and that's why I'm against it," Sen. Roger Reitz, R-Manhattan, said. "I am in favor of marriage being for one man and one woman, but the constitution should be dealt with seriously, not with frivolous

Local educators applaud Sebelius

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius presented her State of the State address Monday to inform Kansas of her proposed programs and budget for 2005.

Among the issues, one of the more popular is Sebelius' call for more funding for Kansas schools.

This comes from the Kansas Supreme Court ruling based on the Augenblick and Meyer study that reported schools must have at least $800 million more to allow children a "suitable" education.

Michele Jones, communications coordinator for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, said she is excited about Sebelius' emphasis on education.

"All of the words were very encouraging; the education community respects this new emphasis on education," Jones said.

Throughout her speech, Sebelius said that now is a time to act, that a "quick fix" cannot be enacted, and that "dumb(ing) down" education is not an option.

Professor Joe Aistrup, head of the Department of Political Science, also commented on Sebelius' education program.

The success of this new concentration on education depends on how the Supreme Court will define the suitability of Kansas schools, he said.

"If the definition of suitability isn't changed based on the (Augenblick and Meyer) studies, we will see an increase in funding for schools along with an obvious need for a tax increase."

If the Supreme Court rules that schools should be put on what Aistrup calls an "underfunding-lite" budget, the schools will be allowed money for basic pre-determined educational needs and any extracurricular money will have to come from the local school districts. This

Indiana students throw guinea pig out window

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. – A self-proclaimed "prank gone bad" might come back to haunt an Indiana freshman who tossed his guinea pig out of an eighth-floor window.

An animal cruelty case is pending against freshman David E. Feldsott. If convicted for the felony charge, he could face fines and possible jail time.

Feldsott, 19, admitted to police officers to using dental floss, masking tape and a garbage bag to parachute the animal out of Briscoe Shoemaker on Dec. 16.

Freshman Laura Robinson led IUPD officers and Briscoe employees to the animal after she spotted the guinea pig wedged between tree branches.

"I felt so bad for the poor animal," she said. "From the ground, I could see the guinea pig shaking."

MARS AND VENUS

GAINESVILLE, Fla. – A University of Florida study has confirmed what couples have claimed for centuries – men and women do not see eye to eye. The study noted men and women view sexual terms, ranging from "orgasm" to "rape," differently.

"We wanted to compare and contrast the meaning of sexual terms over time as well as new words," said Virginia Noland, a professor in the health science education department.

Noland's team of researchers asked about 570 undergraduates at a large Midwestern university to rate their initial feelings toward 42 sexual terms. The study found men saw "feminist," "gay," "heterosexual" and "sexual assault" in a positive light.

On the other side of the coin, women rated "breast enlargement," "erection," "Internet sex," "oral sex," "pornography" and "transgender" more positively.

Views on the term "orgasm" changed during a 15-year period. The study found there is increasing favorability among college-aged women regarding the term.

I AM SO, SO SORRY

AMES, Iowa - After serving 153 days of his 300-day jail sentence, including the day his daughter was born, former Iowa State football player Jason Berryman wrote a letter to District Court Judge William Pattinson asking for an early release.

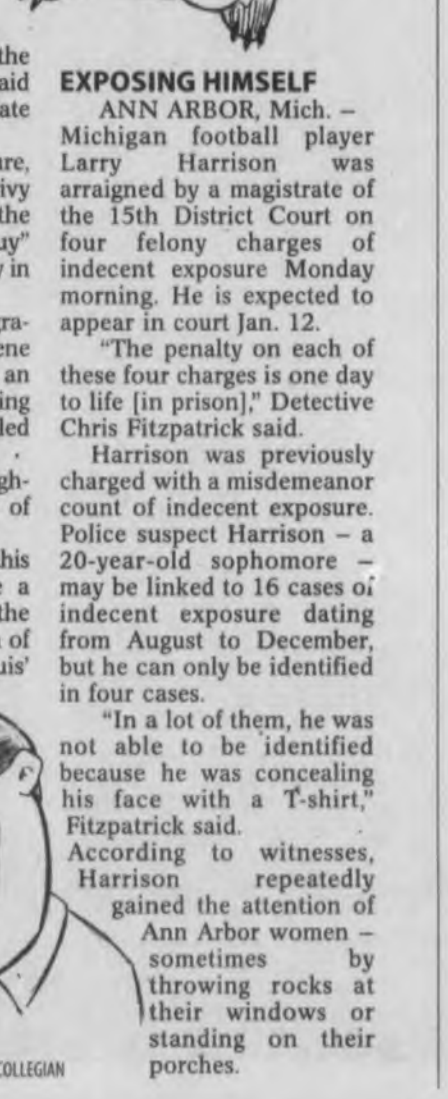
The letter, handwritten by Berryman and dated Dec. 31, stated that he did not want his sentence to be reconsidered because of the pain and loss he has suffered in jail, but because he is "truly, wholeheartedly sorry."

"Your honor, if you want me to beg, I'll beg. If you want me to plead, I'll plead. I'll do anything to make you understand that I'm aware of my mistake and I'm fully rehabilitated and I will never break the law again," he wrote.

Berryman, 19, pleaded guilty to serious misdemeanor assault and felony first-degree theft in October for an incident Aug. 4, 2004.

Berryman stole $4 from Jeffrey Kemble, a junior in health and human performance, punched him in the face and then stole a cell phone from Thomas Peters, a senior in mechanical engineering.

FAMILY GUY APPEARS



COLUMBUS, Ohio – Nearly 1,000 students sat captivated by everything Seth McFarlene, creator of the TV show "Family Guy," said during his visit to Ohio State University Sunday night.

Throughout his lecture, those in attendance were privy to information regarding the next season of "Family Guy" and its lovable Griffin family in the city of Quahog.

After giving a short biography of himself, McFarlene played a rough cut of an episode for the upcoming "Family Guy" season titled "North by North Quahog."

The episode displayed highlights that are reminiscent of "Family Guy" humor.

Some gags to look for in this fourth season episode are a spoof on "The Passion of the Christ;" the Beyond section of Bed, Bath and Beyond; Louis' love affair with Kermit the Frog; and Brian – the family's talking dog – changing Stewie's dirty diaper.

EXPOSING HIMSELF

ANN ARBOR, Mich. – Michigan football player Larry Harrison was arraigned by a magistrate of the 15th District Court on four felony charges of indecent exposure Monday morning. He is expected to appear in court Jan. 12.

"The penalty on each of these four charges is one day to life [in prison]," Detective Chris Fitzpatrick said.

Harrison was previously charged with a misdemeanor count of indecent exposure. Police suspect Harrison – a 20-year-old sophomore – may be linked to 16 cases of indecent exposure dating from August to December, but he can only be identified in four cases.

"In a lot of them, he was not able to be identified because he was concealing his face with a T-shirt," Fitzpatrick said.

According to witnesses, Harrison repeatedly gained the attention of Ann Arbor women – sometimes by throwing rocks at their windows or standing on their porches.

Student Senate to tackle policies, work with Kansas legislators

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members of Student Governing Association and Student Senate are wasting no time getting back to work on issues that will affect students this semester.

On Senate's front burner are the proposed alterations to the SGA elections regulations, Senate Vice-chair Tyson Moore said.

"The (Senate Operations) committee has been working for seven months on the elections regulations to try to go through them, update them and fix some problems we saw in last year's elections," Moore said. "Just doing a comprehensive update on a lot of those."

Operations Committee Chair Sarah Laib said the committee did not meet over break to iron out the concerns over the wording of the new regulations changes, but said they will meet before the next Senate meeting.

"There were some things that needed to be fixed and some things that needed to be worked out," Laib said. "I think those kinks will be able to be worked out if they haven't already been."

Moore said the election matters had to be resolved within the first couple of meetings.

"We're probably going to get it done the first or second meeting back," he said.

"We have to get it done before the next election so Elections Commissioner David McCandless and those that are running, can know what the regulations are."

The first meeting of the semester is scheduled for Jan. 20. Senators are also focused on other issues.

DROP POLICY

Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said the executive branch of SGA has important things on the horizon as well.

"The drop policy is still going to be an issue this semester," Urkevich said, referring to a policy passed last semester by Faculty Senate allowing professors to drop any student who is absent on the first day of class.

She said faculty members want to see statistics from this semester to get a better idea of how many students are actually dropped from courses.

Vice President Erik Ankrom said a subcommittee made up of leaders from both Faculty and Student senates has been examining the policy's workability.

HONORS PROGRAM

Moore said another issue getting some attention this semester is creating a university-wide academic honors program.

"The provost has called for a report in early March to see what we need to do to further that effort," Moore said.

"It will be a coordinating effort among all the colleges to make a more comprehensive honors program."

THE KANSAS LEGISLATURE

Moore said senators also plan to travel to Topeka to discuss issues involving higher education with legislators in the coming months as well.

"We are going to start coordinating State Education Day at the Capitol with all the other regents institutions," Moore said.

Moore said the event, which is slated for mid-February, is not a lobbying effort, but rather a way to communicate concerns.

In addition, Cats in the Capitol, a similar program but one which focuses on concerns specific to K-State, will take place around the same time.

Ankrom said there will be a lot of other behind-the-scenes work, such as ongoing discussions with administration officials about tuition and other funding matters that will be going on over the next several weeks.

Architecture department welcomes new leader

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN
David Sachs, the new head of the Department of Architecture, will be taking over after serving as an associate head for four years. He was recommended by colleagues.

By Andrew Leslie
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The architecture program has a new department head.

David Sachs was promoted to department head after serving as the associate head of the Department of Architecture for four years and the coordinator of the college's Kansas City academic program for seven years. He was selected based on recommendations from colleagues.

"I was honored to be selected by my peers and the confidence they showed in me," Sachs said.

Mick Charney, associate professor of architecture, said Sachs is well qualified.

"The department can only get stronger with David as the department head," he said.

He was appointed to the position by Dennis Law, dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design. Sachs has a lot of experience and was an outstanding associate department head, Law said.

Sachs came to K-State in fall 1988, when he taught all levels of design studio, building construction and project programming.

He chose K-State after working with alumni in St. Louis.

"I was very impressed by the K-State graduates and decided that there must be something great happening there," he said.

Sachs was raised in Cincinnati and earned a bachelor's degree in economics from Stetson University.

He went on to earn a professional master of architecture degree from Rice University and a doctor of architecture from the University of Michigan.

Sachs worked with various architectural firms in the South and Midwest, most notably in the office of the late Samuel Mockbee, an award-winning architect.

"He taught me to really love the business of architecture. From the exciting to the mundane, Mockbee taught me to love it all," Sachs said.

Sachs said he is happy with the department's level of excellence and hopes to continue that tradition.

"I want to help it evolve in accordance with the evolution of the profession so it will continue to be one of the leading programs in the country," he said.

Faculty, students seek compromise on drop policy

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Missing class on the first day, or even being late, now carries consequences for students.

In recent years, the K-State class drop policy has changed numerous times.

Despite strong concerns and disapproval from Student Senate, the Faculty Senate passed changes in the drop policy last spring.

While the policy uses the word "may" in its context, over 100 students were dropped on the first day of class in fall 2004.

Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said she worries about the welfare of the students. She said that while students are generally well-intentioned, unforeseen circumstances may arise which could prevent a student from attending class on time on the first day.

Urkevich notes that family emergencies can occur and many students get lost on their way to class and make it in after roll call has already been taken.

These situations rule out contacting the instructor in advance, and often students do not know who to contact when the line schedule notes the instructor as "staff" or what office to call to find out this information.

"The current drop policy places an unfair burden on students and I would like to see it changed," Urkevich said.

Student Senate attempted to remedy the situation by proposing a resolution last spring, but to date no changes have been approved.

"I believe a compromise, such as a second-day drop policy, would better meet the needs of both students and faculty," Urkevich said.

Other possibilities include revisions to the policy so that students may only be dropped if they do not show up at all on the first day, or allowing students to contact the instructor after the class to be excused.

Jackie Spears, Faculty Senate president, said the intention of the new policy is not to punish students, but to help them by encouraging class attendance.

"In general, I think the policy makes sense.

"At face value, it appears that the majority of faculty members who implemented the policy were teaching classes that were closed," she said.

"Other faculty members presumably implemented the policy because they felt that student attendance was a vital part of the course design."

Although Faculty Senate stands firm in its stance on the issue, there is still a possibility of changes to come.

At the Dec. 7 Faculty Senate Academic Affairs meeting, it was voted on and passed to form two subcommittees to include Academic Affairs and Student Senate members to re-examine the current drop policy.

Urkevich said the first subcommittee will attend to policy revision and any other changes needed. The second will deal with implementing the policy and coping with problems in educating faculty and students.

"There is an atmosphere of compromise and a willingness to work together between the members of the committees. We will continue to meet, and I believe we will see changes," she said.

Tanner Richards, sophomore in chemical engineering, said she views the policy optimistically.

"I think the policy is fair, especially if it's a wait-listed class, because if it's an important class to someone then they won't miss it," he said.

In the end, Spears said, the policy affects students positively.

"Given a choice, faculty members would prefer working with students who are committed to gaining the most from their classes," she said.

TO THE POINT

Senate leaders must stay true to student concerns

Dear Hayley and Erik, and all K-State students they serve,

On April 12, 2004, the Collegian editorial asked that the newly elected Student Governing Association president and vice president act to keep their promises they had expressed in their campaign platform.

The Collegian is proud to see the promised student-friendly computer system portal has now come to completion through the Wildcat Information Network.

While the Collegian extends its congratulations to Hayley and Erik, we would also like to remind them that there are other promises they need to work to fulfill as well.

At the front of surely every student's mind is tuition rates.

Remember that the students that have put their trust in you to look out for their best interests. Do not fail us.

Make our tuition rates as affordable as you can.

Moreover, as our school prepares to reconsider the drop policy, we would like to remind you that the welfare and quality of education rests in your hands.

Of course, quality student government works both ways.

Students, if you care about your tuition or the policies that affect you, make it a point to read the articles dealing with SGA.

Student leaders, be prepared to take action after listening to your students.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The art of complaining

Being American means never remaining silent

JULIA STOSKOPF

George W. Bush will soon be sworn in as president for his second term. Those are the results of the election – good or bad. But how much are K-State students thinking about what Bush will change or accomplish in the next four years?

Americans may have turned out in droves to vote this election year, but politics and involvement in government are not just important in an election year. The same statement holds true for politics and government actions at all levels.

How much does the average K-State student know about the new appointees to the Bush cabinet or the Fourth Street Development project or even the new bioterrorism center project?

I am not trying to convince each and every student at Kansas State University to read the New York Times cover to cover every morning. Instead, this column is a call to action for students to learn about the world around them, whether it be Kansas State University, Manhattan, Riley County, Kansas, the United States or the entire globe.

The problem is that elections are over. Students are back from winter break and returning to their busy lives filled with work, school and entertainment, if time permits. The fact is that political involvement and awareness in non-election years simply decreases.

The solution is simple. Flip on the TV for a few minutes before school or during a lunch break.

News programs stream 24 hours a day. There is a channel for every political viewpoint possible from CNN to Fox. Switch to a news station and watch one of the marquees for a few minutes, if nothing else.

If the conventional news stations just don't satisfy, flip on an unconventional program. According to the Nov. 2 USA Today, the Pew Research Center for the People and the Press announced last year that 21 percent of 18- to 29-year-olds receive political campaign information from shows like The Daily Show with Jon Stewart and Saturday Night Live.

While some may consider these programs a joke, Dannagal Young, researcher at the Annenberg Policy Center, discovered that viewers of The Daily Show with Jon Stewart had increased background knowledge of political candidates and campaigns, according to the Oct. 21 San Francisco Chronicle.

If a television is unavailable or there just isn't time, pick up a Collegian and read more than just the Fourum. If there is an issue that is interesting, disturbing, boring, offensive or just plain weird, do more than make a mental note.

If you find a column offensive, write the newspaper, call the TV station.

If the issue is important enough, contact a politician. But if the national government or even president Jon Wefald seem too out-of-reach, just talk about what you consider important. This country was founded on the principles of discussion, so argue with a friend, a professor or even a complete stranger. An exchange of opinions or beliefs will only make for a better university and a better country.

Make a New Year's resolution to simply find an issue this year – big or small, local or national – and talk about it. This year, choose to talk or argue or scream, instead of just complaining quietly. After all, "we the people" stands for more than silence.

Students deserve better treatment in course scheduling

JONAS HOGG

Well, the break is over, and it has been, hopefully, a fairly uneventful one for most of us. But as the semester rears its head, the reality of school begins to sink back in. For many, this will be the grand finale to their academic life.

Unfortunately, not everyone will be finishing up on time, and, in some cases, they are not the ones to blame.

Everyone is encouraged to construct the vaunted four-year plan as soon as they come to the pearly gates of academia. But after about the first ten seconds of enrollment, it becomes glaringly obvious that the four-year plan is less of a plan and more of a four-year wish list.

Not only are many forced to contend with required classes and prerequisites that fill up before they are able to enroll, they are also forced to muddle their way through a course catalog that has apparently not seen an update since it was originally posted online. Courses whose time frames are incorrectly listed, or, my personal favorites, courses that no one has ever heard of, much less taught, pop up with annoying regularity. To make matters even more stellar, through some slip of the mental giants that comprise Kansas State Information Technology, these classes are available for enrollment even though they are not actually being offered.

Imagine the joy you would experience when you get an e-mail one week before the semester begins that states something along the lines of "I'm sorry, we were just kidding, this class that you need to graduate at the end of this semester isn't actually being offered when we said it is."

Surely, we, as the students of this institution, deserve better treatment than this. If the university is going to expect students to construct a four-year plan, then we should expect the university to make it possible to construct a four-year plan without last minute shenanigans like this.

How difficult can it be, once a semester, to go through and scrub the catalog? Make sure there are no glaring errors, such as classes that are being offered by professors who are either teaching elsewhere or dead and gone. Make sure that if it says a class will be offered spring 2005 that the damn class will be offered.

As much of a pain as it is to miss a required class, if the students know that a required class will not be offered when promised, at least they can coordinate with advisers and professors to reach an equitable conclusion. But, simply telling a student "sorry, get stuffed" one week before his final semester is not becoming of an institution of higher learning.

The only solution to problems like these is to hold the university to the same standards to which they hold us. As students we live in a world of dates: dates for tests, dates for reports, dates for finals, dates for graduations. Some of these dates are flexible from one day to the next; however, missing your graduation, losing a job offer and setting your life back several months due to someone else's ineptitude is certainly not acceptable, and especially not from an institution designed to help us advance in life.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444 -or- fourum@spub.ksu.edu

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

Here are some tips for calling the Collegian's Campus Fourum:

Keep your opinion based on issues, not personalities or personal vendettas. Keep it short. There is only time for about two or three short sentences.

Speak clearly. If you cannot be understood, then you will not be printed.

The Collegian will try to offer as many diverse opinions as possible, so put an interesting spin on your comments.

Do not give background on the issue. Immediately state your stance or a plan of action.

Be honest. We do not ask for your name, nor do we use Caller ID to see from whom comments are coming. Your opinion is completely anonymous.

To submit comments, call 395-4444 or e-mail fourum@spub.ksu.edu.

I've been wondering, do you think those squirrels are hibernating?

You know you're a nerd when you watch the Lord of the Rings extended edition DVDs back to back to back.

Hey, yell leaders. There's no clapping in the alma mater. Thank you.

Just to let everyone know the parking nazis will still give tickets even though school is not in session. So be careful where you park.

I must be out of it. Will someone please tell me who is D-town?

I just got dumped. Happy New Year to me.

Wahoo! The Fourum is back, and I have three words for you: SALT THE SIDEWALKS.

Everybody on Facebook: Go to contact at the bottom and request that Wichita State be put in. Good day.

FROM THE EDITOR

New editor in chief wants to put readers first, asks for feedback

SARAH RICE

Most of you reading this have, at one time or another, complained about how much the Collegian sucks.

You've cursed the crossword for being blurry or the gatekeeper of the Campus Fourum for not including your comments.

But behind the newsprint are the most dedicated and passionate people I have ever encountered.

The newsroom is rarely empty. There are Collegian staff members designing a page, writing a colûmn, taking photos or editing stories around the clock.

My favorite quote about journalism is "The newspaper will take the life out of you. It can make you hate it so much that you curse the day you wandered into it."

There are days we feel like that – when the computers are crashing, the stories are late, and we answer the phone to thousands of readers' complaints.

But that's exactly why we are here – for you, the readers. Our job is to inform, motivate, analyze, entertain and provide a forum for public discussion.

This semester we have doubled our staff size in hopes of not only bringing more diversity to our coverage, but creating a beat system with reporters assigned to different campus organizations. With more than 70 reporters, we have the opportunity to cover more of the issues and events that affect you.

We still need your help, though. If you feel like something isn't getting enough space in the paper, let me know. We have limited space and will never make everybody happy, but my goal is to put you first in every decision that's made.

I know most of you will read the Fourum first and then move on to the crossword. But, hopefully we can offer you more. The Edge page will continue to highlight local music and art, but will expand to focus on college life, including drinking games, sex, cheap meals and fashion. The sports page will feature not only game coverage, but athlete profiles and intramural and club sports.

If you've never read the online edition of the Collegian, take a look at www.kstatecollegian.com. It's there you will find weekend game results, photo galleries and a weekly poll question. In time, we hope to have video and other interactive features.

The Collegian strives to maintain professional journalistic standards while teaching newspaper skills at the same time. We do make mistakes. Call us when we do.

The end of that quote speaks to the passion of a journalist – the depth they feel the love of journalism in their heart.

"You'll reckon your life from the day you entered the newspaper business, and end the most important part of it on the day you left."

We're here because we love it.

And most importantly, we here to serve you.

Sarah is a senior in print journalism. You can e-mail her at srice@k-state.edu.

Library loan department receives praise

Dear Editor,

Through this letter I would like to applaud the staff members of the Inter Library Loan (ILL) Department at KSU for all the wonderful service I have received.

My privilege to use their services is only as an outside patron, but still they have accommodated my every request with great care and concern.

They have always been highly courteous and professional over the phone and have met some of my rush requests with lightning speed.

With such great help, I truly am made to feel like the world is at my fingertips and nothing is beyond my reach.

Thanks again for all you do.

K-State 87, Missouri 44

Easy win for Wildcats

Wecker leads team, nabs 42nd career double-double

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Missouri was 0-5 this year when trailing at the end of the first half.

They are now 0-6.

In the first half, the Wildcats held Missouri to 23 percent from the field and the Tigers (7-7, 1-2) didn't help their cause by going 1-10 from behind the arc, as No. 23 K-State defeated Missouri 87-44 Tuesday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

"We started off a little sluggish, and obviously they were a handful tonight," Missouri coach Cindy Stein said.

Kendra Wecker led the Wildcats (11-3, 2-1) with her 42nd career double-double as she recorded game highs with 25 points and 12 rebounds.

The only other player in double figures for K-State was Laurie Koehn, who finished with 21 points and shot 5-10 from 3-point range.

"I thought it was a reflection of us playing great basketball," K-State coach Deb Patterson said. "It's not about who was in double figures, it's about the fact that every possession up the floor, by and large we shared the ball, we found the open player, we put the ball in the hands of the players who were hot."

The Wildcat defense held the Tigers' leading scorers in check.

Tiffany Brooks - a K-State transfer and Missouri's leading scorer and third highest scorer in Big 12 conference play - was held to 13 points, nine points below her conference average. Missouri's second leading scorer, Christelle N'Garsanet, was held scoreless and played only 10 minutes due to an injured foot.

Since Brooks regained her eligibility five games ago, Missouri had averaged 64.2 points per game.

K-State forced 22 turnovers in the game, 11 of them in the first half. The Wildcats outscored the Tigers 30-11 on points off turnovers.

"The defensive effort that we started the game with propelled our basketball team for the entire night," Patterson said. "It was good on the perimeter, it was good inside, we had a lot of deflections which created a lot of steal opportunities and it just led to an overall great game for us."

Undersized in the post, the Wildcats ran the floor on the slower Tigers, outscoring Missouri 14-2 in fast-break points. Wecker said it was something they knew they could do against Missouri.

"It was something we knew we could do from the beginning of the game," Wecker said. "Our coaches scouted them very well and I think our post players were able to get up and down the floor and our guys made good decisions in the open floor and they all did a good job of finding the open person, and that all starts on the defensive end."

K-State has won eight straight games over Missouri and 19 straight Big 12 Conference home games.

The Tigers are 0-23 all-time against Big 12 ranked opponents.

For 11 games, Cartier Martin flew under the radar for the K-State men's basketball team, as the Wildcats jumped out to a 10-1 start.

Then came Saturday's Big 12 Conference opener at Nebraska.

Though the Wildcats fell 95-85 to the Cornhuskers in double-overtime, the sophomore forward had a breakout performance, scoring a career-high 23 points on 8-of-12 shooting.

Generally taking a back seat this season in recognition to senior forward and reigning Big 12 Newcomer of the Year Jeremiah Massey and sophomore guard Fred Peete, Martin has hit double-figures in six straight games.

As the Wildcats (10-2, 0-1) prepare to take on Texas Tech (8-4, 0-1) at 7 tonight at Bramlage Coliseum, Coach Jim Wooldridge said Martin has shown that he is one of many Wildcats that can step up on any given night.

"He's like Lance (Harris), Fred and Jeremiah and guys like that who can have segments of games where they really produce some numbers for us," Wooldridge said.

Somewhat quietly, Martin is putting up stellar numbers so far this season. The 6-foot-7 swingman is averaging 11.3 points per game, while shooting 53 percent from the field and a blistering 53 percent from 3-point land as well.

On Saturday, with Massey playing but nursing an ankle injury and the team trailing 36-26 at the half, Martin showcased a star power many expected of the highly-touted recruit when he arrived in Manhattan last season.

The Houston native scored 15 second-half points and led the Wildcats' comeback from a 12-point deficit.

"I talked to the team at halftime to try to get us going," Martin said. "I wanted to let them know that I'm going to try to help get us through this."

Martin, who also grabbed a team-high seven rebounds and was 4-of-5 from behind the arc against Nebraska, has impressed Wooldridge with his all-around game.

"He continues to take steps in the right direction," Wooldridge said. "His overall play has improved dramatically since the start of the season."

Undoubtedly, the Wildcats will need another outstanding effort from Martin tonight, as Massey, the team's scoring

Wildcats looking to build on best start since 1998-1999 season

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The year was 1998. A Democrat was in the White House, the country was preparing for the new millennium, and it was the last time the K-State men's basketball team was 10-2 through the first 12 games of the season.

Six years later, with different leadership in the White House and a different leader on the court, the Wildcats have won 10 of their first 12 games for the first time since former coach Tom Asbury roamed the Bramlage Coliseum floor.

The 10-2 record is the best start for current coach Jim Wooldridge.

"I think it is a building block to get better through the season," Wooldridge said. "We really have to take advantage of the next couple of months."

K-State got off to its best start under Wooldridge, with eight straight victories before losing to Rutgers 76-66 on Dec. 28. The 8-0 start was also the best start by a Wildcat team since the 1979-80 season.

K-State heads into tonight's game against Texas Tech (8-4, 0-1) averaging 72.8 points per game and holding opponents to 41.3 percent shooting from the floor.

"We got off to a great start this season and it was a point of emphasis coming into this season."

Carter Martin
SOPHOMORE GUARD

K-State has also benefited from having the second best assist/turnover ratio in the Big 12 Conference, at 1.36 assists to one turnover.

Sophomore guard Cartier Martin said the Wildcats playing within themselves has led to the quick start.

"We got off to a great start this season and it was a point of emphasis coming into this season," Martin, who is the team's third leading scorer with 11.3 points per game, said. "We learned from the losses and those two losses are going to make us better."

Despite the Wildcats losing their second straight Big 12 opener, Wooldridge said he believes this year's team is ready to take the next step and move up in the Big 12 standings.

"We have the opportunity in front of us," Wooldridge said. "We've learned some lessons from this 10-2 mark, but we have to get better."

The 1998-99 Wildcats finished the season with a 20-13 record, and it was the last time a K-State team ended with a winning record.

Senior forward and team leader Jeremiah Massey said the team is looking to improve on last year's record, and a 20-win season isn't out of reach.

"It is something we can accomplish as a team," Massey said. "We are a good bunch of guys, and if we come together we can accomplish anything."

Baseball | Carlos Beltran joins 'the new Mets' team

Carlos Beltran joined what he called "the new Mets" on Tuesday, finalizing his $119 million, seven-year contract with New York.

Beltran

Beltran said he was impressed that Mets owner Fred Wilpon and general manager Omar Minaya flew down to visit him in his native Puerto Rico.

"I feel proud to be part of a new family: the New York Mets. The new Mets," Beltran said at a news conference at Shea Stadium.

"I call it `the new Mets' because this organization is going to a new direction, the right direction, the direction of winning."

In introducing his second big offseason signing, Minaya called Beltran "one of the best all-around players in baseball."

CFB | Syracuse hires Greg Robinson as head coach

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — After 30 years as an assistant coach in the college and pro ranks, Greg Robinson finally realized his career goal of becoming a head coach by accepting the job at Syracuse.

Robinson

A year to the day after resigning as the defensive coordinator of the Kansas City Chiefs and after a short, but successful stint at Texas, Robinson was introduced as the new coach of the Orange on Tuesday.

The 53-year-old Robinson spent 15 years in the college ranks before jumping to the NFL for 14 years, including stints as defensive coordinator with Kansas City and Denver. He also was an assistant with the New York Jets from 1990-94, and last season returned to college as co-defensive coordinator for the Texas Longhorns.

Robinson succeeds Paul Pasqualoni, who was fired Dec. 29 by new athletic director Daryl Gross. The firing came eight days after Syracuse lost to Georgia Tech 51-14 in the Champs Sports Bowl.

MLB | Johnson apologizes for run-in with cameraman

NEW YORK - Randy Johnson's first pitch in pinstripes was an apology.

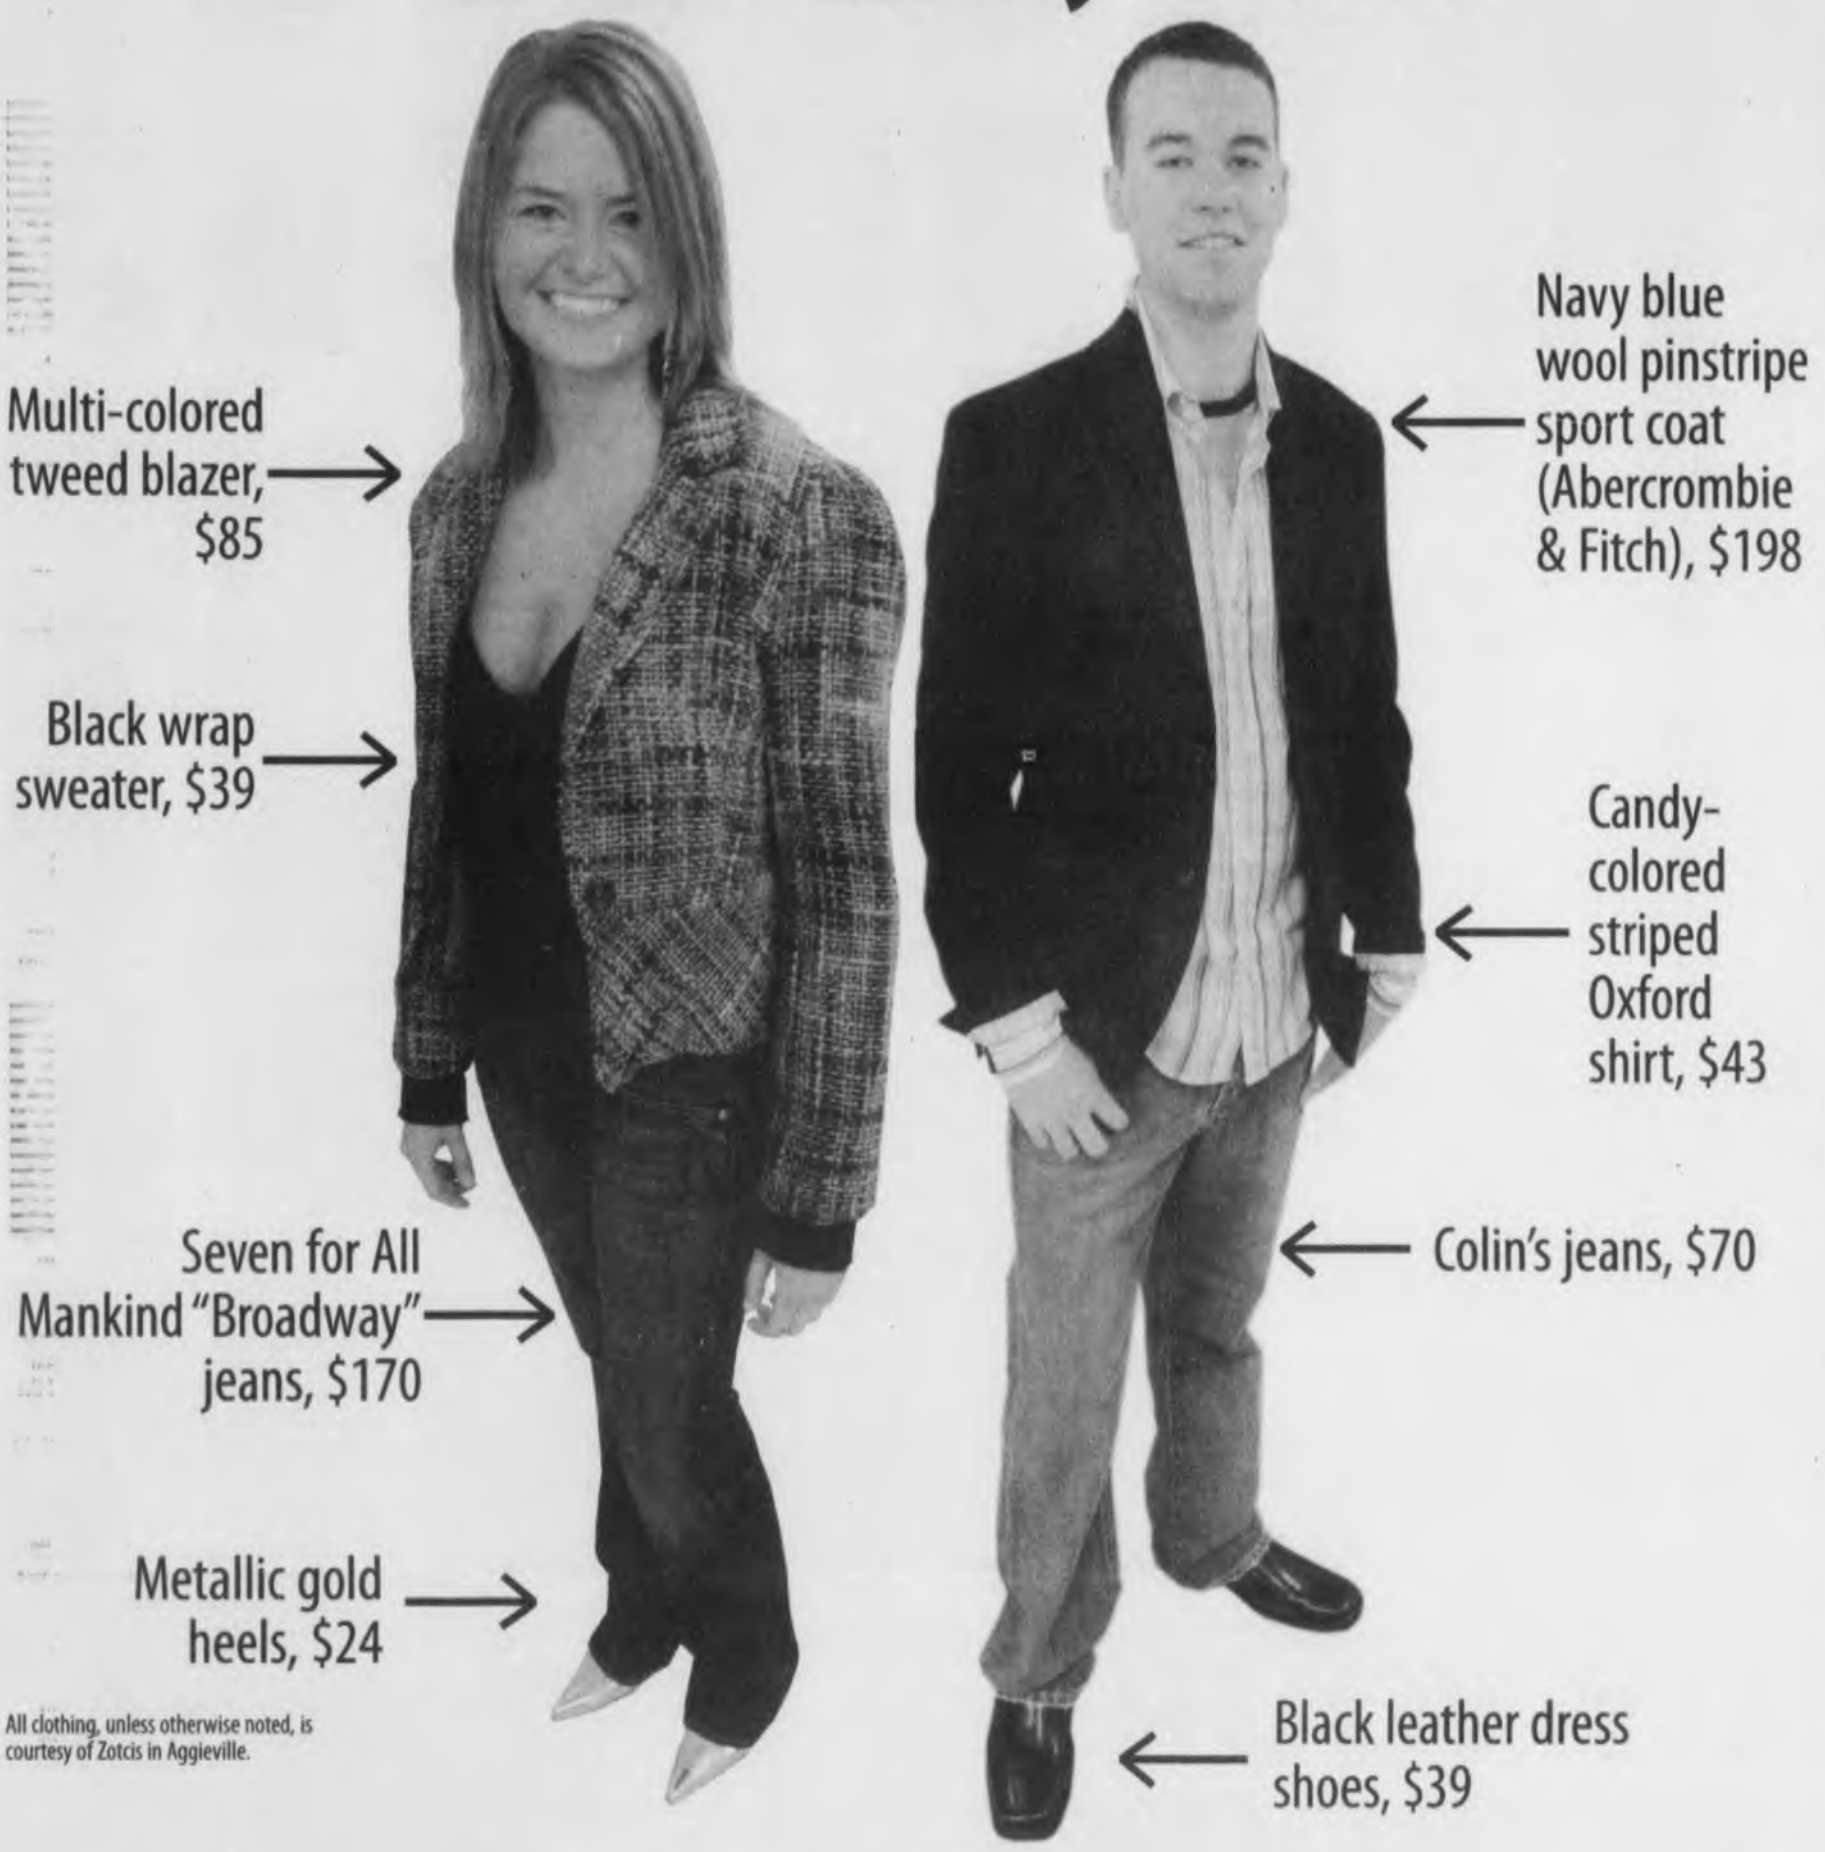
The Big Unit opened Tuesday's news conference introducing him as a member of the New York Yankees by talking about his confrontation on a Manhattan sidewalk with a television cameraman on the way to his physical for the team the day before.

Johnson

"I'd first like to once again reiterate: The situation yesterday, it was unprofessional," Johnson said, "and obviously I feel very foolish today at such a great moment of my career that I would have to stand before you and apologize for my actions. Hopefully it's water under the bridge."

The five-time Cy Young Award winner got a $32 million, two-year contract extension that runs through 2007.

NFL | Marino, Young among 15 finalists for Hall of Fame



CANTON, Ohio - Dan Marino and Steve Young set dozens of NFL passing records in the 1980s and '90s, some of which Peyton Manning is erasing now. Marino and Young soon might have something else in common: membership in the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

The two retired quarterbacks are among 15 finalists for the hall announced Tuesday. The class of 2005, which will have from three to six members, will be announced Feb. 5, the day before the Super Bowl in Jacksonville, Fla.

Marino, who holds many of the NFL's career passing records, and Young, who led San Francisco to the 1995 Super Bowl title, are among four finalists who made the list in their first year of eligibility.

The others are Michael Irvin, a member of the Dallas teams that won three Super Bowls between 1992 and 1995, and the late Derrick Thomas, the Kansas City linebacker who died in 2000 after a car accident.

The top trends to maintain your good-looking image

By Courtney Lair
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At the mention of "winter fashion," visions of bulky sweaters and puffy ski coats are often the first things that pop into one's head. However, that is simply not the case this winter.

With the immense and diverse selection of clothing and accessories out right now, it will certainly not be hard to find something fabulous to keep you warm and cozy for when it's cold outside.

Ladies, I believe that this winter's fashion is the best this season has seen in years, so we must definitely take advantage.

Whether you are more into classic lady-like or eclectic bohemian (two looks that are really big right now), why not mix them up a little bit and come up with a style that is uniquely you? Below is a list of some of the main trends happening right now, but always feel free to experiment with different things.

■ Herringbone, bouclé and tweed all look equally chic in the form of coats, skirts, heels and handbags.
■ Shearling boots with your jeans tucked in - the bigger and furrier the boots, the better.
■ Add some sparkle with a sequined scarf, costume jewelry (the more, the better),or embellished Moroccan slippers.
■ Try layering pieces in unexpected fabrics, textures and colors for a fun, random look. For example, a cropped pink Bouclé jacket over a lime green satin cami would be refreshing in a non-traditional way.
■ Snuggle up in a luxurious coat or capelet. To work this look to a lesser extent, try a cardigan with a fur collar.
■ Moccasins are still ultra-stylish and now come in an extensive assortment. The original Minnetonka "Thunderbird" has inspired countless brands to do their own interpretations, such as animal print, jewel-embellished, lace-up boots and, most recently, heels.
■ Throw a bold blazer on over a fitted vintage tee for day or over a lace cami for night.
■ Two trends in handbags right now - either big and slouchy in bright or metallic leather, or more polished in a classic shape with handles and lots of hardware.
■ Designer jeans are so hot right now. True Religion, Seven for All Mankind, Citizens of Humanity, Rock & Republic, Joe's Jeans and Earnest Sewn are among the many brands coveted for their ever-so-flattering fits. Zotcis in Aggieville has a great selection of denim in a wide price range, including some of the brands previously mentioned.
■ Animal prints such as leopard or python can enhance an otherwise ordinary outfit.
■ A puffy ski vest looks adorable over a cable-knit sweater–very snow-bunny chic.

Now, of course I would never leave out the guys on campus. Men's fashion is evolving at a faster rate than ever, possibly due to the vast attention on the "metrosexual" last year.

Guys no longer have to worry about people questioning their masculinity for choosing to wear, for example, pink. Honestly, what girl doesn't love a guy in a pink polo?

Society is finally accepting and encouraging men who embrace their freedom to dress as they choose. No longer must a well-dressed man suffer from social stigma.

An increasing number of guys are taking advantage of the plethora of new options in clothing and accessories available to them today. For men, here are some of the leading trends that you might want to try this winter:

■ Multi-colored striped Oxford shirts are a nice alternative to the plain versions.
■ Vintage-inspired athletic shoes look good with basically anything. Try Puma–they are super-cool and come in tons of unique styles and colors.
■ Men's jeans are moving towards a more fitted look. Worn-in and distressed denim is still the way to go.
■ Wool pinstripe or tweed blazers (or even a vintage suit coat) worn over jeans and a tee give off a sexy, confident vibe.
■ Sporty wristbands and leather cuffs, scarves, eye-catching belts and messenger bags can all be used to accentuate your look. Check out www.urbanoutfitters.com for inspiration.
■ Wool pea coats and toggle coats look sharp on campus or for dressier occasions.
■ The fauxhawk (hair in the middle is slightly longer than other hair) was recently revived by the gorgeous David Beckham. I know lots of girls would like to see more of these on campus.
■ Like I mentioned before, do not be afraid to wear pink or any other bright colors to break out of your winter rut.

Remember, these are just some of the main trends going on right now; do not feel limited to these options. The fun part about fashion is that there really is no right or wrong. Different things work for different people, and everybody has his own unique sense of style.

Keep in mind, when you are experimenting with new trends and different looks, a little confidence goes a long way, and above all, just let your fabulous self shine through.

Proof of wisdom: he has a beard and suffers from male pattern baldness.

If you have any questions about college life or life in general, please write in and Adam will give you the best advice in the world, guaranteed.

Q: Every time I go out partying with my friends, I end up spending my entire night taking care of my drunkest friends. How can I avoid this?

A: You should politely confront your friends by telling them that their excessive drinking is causing you to blah blah blah blah.

Forget that.

The only way to avoid taking care of the drunkest of your friends is to be as drunk or drunker than they are.

No one will expect you to hold someone's hair while they are puking, or to carry anyone upstairs to their apartment when you have just fallen face first into a thorn bush.

No one will expect you to be the designated driver when instead of retrieving your car keys from your pocket, you unknowingly pull out a string of Mardi Gras beads with a fork tied to the end.

The only way to avoid baby-sitting that one super-drunk person is to be that person.

Aniston

"This decision is a result of much thoughtful consideration. We happily remain committed and caring friends with great love and admiration for one another."

— superstar couple Brad Pitt and Jennifer Aniston, in a joint statement announcing their separation after 4 1/2 years of marriage.

"The great thing about Shakespeare and why he's so difficult to pin down is his ambiguity. He's not saying they're gay or they're straight, he's leaving it up to his actors."

— actor Joseph Fiennes, on a controversial kiss that his character, Bassanio, delivers to his friend, Antonio, in an upcoming film adaptation of "The Merchant of Venice."

Sutherland

"I saw a 6-year-old carrying a 30-pound mortar with another 6-year-old following behind with a match."

— actor Kiefer Sutherland to CBS Late Show host David Letterman on Iceland's penchant for fireworks during New Year's Eve celebrations.

Simpson

"You make me wanna scream."

— singer Ashlee Simpson in a song before the audience jeered her at the Orange Bowl.

"I'm going into rehab because I use too much wine and Vicodin. ... I could easily have continued functioning at a good level for awhile. But my use would have progressed, I would have been in deeper trouble, and I didn't want to tolerate that."

— veteran comedian George Carlin, announcing that he was entering treatment for dependency on alcohol and prescription painkillers.

Madonna

"It's like a war inside me. ... I'm gasping for breath, I'm trying to remember everything I'm supposed to do ... the words to the songs, the notes on the guitar, the steps. I'm thinking about the pain in my back. I'm trying to get enough oxygen."

— pop star Madonna, in an interview with "The Early Show" on CBS, describing what it's like to perform live on stage.

Head in the clouds

Columnist reflects on sports during break

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Sitting on the flight from Orange County back to Manhattan, I had three hours to reflect on what happened in sports the past three weeks while I had been soaking up the rain at home.

AS KOBE'S WORLD TURNS

The Kobe Bryant soap opera continued nationally, but nowhere was it more scrutinized than on Los Angeles sports talk radio and in newspapers that couldn't get enough of the Christmas Day match-up with the Miami Heat and Shaquille O'Neal visiting the Los Angeles Kobes (I mean, Lakers).

Short analysis - Shaq barely acknowledged Bryant at the tip-off handshake, O'Neal fouled out, Kobe went scoreless in overtime and missed a three-pointer at the buzzer and the Lakers lost. But Kobe did score 40 points again, and isn't that all that really matters?

BIG TIMES FOR MID-MAJORS

It wasn't the most hyped game, but those who watched the Liberty Bowl between Boise State and Louisville saw arguably the best game this bowl season between two evenly matched teams.

Boise State lost but, along with Utah – which will slip back into obscurity with the loss of its head coach and Heisman finalist quarterback – they proved they can play with the major conferences.

SOONERS SLUMP

It was the most anticipated college game, an instant classic, but it turned out to be a disaster for Bob Stoops and the Oklahoma Sooners.

For the second year in a row, the Sooners ran into a team with an equal amount of talent on the field and Stoops proved to me once again that he is the most overrated head coach in college football.

He is to college football what Steve Lavin of Florida is to college basketball.

He is a great recruiter and media savvy, but unable to set up different schemes and adjust to his opponent.

Oklahoma was supposed to punch USC in the mouth and dominate at the line. They did on their first drive, but then, like the heavyweight fight which it was played up to be, the Trojans counterpunched, leaving Stoops and the Sooners dazed and confused the rest of the game.

Thanks for showing up, Oklahoma, and for your efforts, Los Angeles sports talk radio is now referring to the conference as the Small 12.

MAJOR BUCKS FOR BELTRAN

As anticipated, Carlos Beltran is headed to New York, but not with the Yankees. He is headed to be the new King of Queens for the Mets. He did say he preferred a smaller market team, and that is what the Mets are to their big brothers from the Bronx.

Ultimately, Beltran will regret the move and should have stayed in Houston for about $7 million less, but with a whole lot fewer headaches and big contract expectations from the fans and media.

Time's up; it's time to land, and these are my sports memories from the past three weeks.

I wasn't able to fit in all I wanted to, but I'll save space another day for the Los Angeles Dodgers, the Los Angeles Angels of Anaheim and Wade Boggs' induction into the Baseball Hall of Fame, but his failure to answer the question everyone wants to know: "Did you really drink 42 beers on one cross country flight?"

University Commons to expand complex

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new 24-unit building will be constructed at the south end of the University Commons complex.

City Commissioners approved an amendment Tuesday night to a building plan at University Commons, 2215 College Ave.

The structure was included in the original plan, but the location of the building and the parking configuration have been changed.

Eric Cattell, assistant director for planning, presented the amendment to the Commission.

"The new plan will allow better position and better parking," Cattell said.

The four-level building will include two- and three-bedroom condominiums.

There will also be a new water feature in the southwest corner of the complex.

Cattell said they intend to market to K-State students, alumni and fans.

Commissioner Mark Taussig pointed out that the new plan includes 53 bedrooms and 53 parking spaces, three of which are designated as handicapped.

"Those spots are not available to tenants unless they have a handicapped permit," Taussig said.

Though the amendment meets the minimum required number of spaces, it may not actually be enough to accommodate the residents, he said.

"In the future, that is something we might want to consider," Taussig said.

The commission also passed motion to purchase more land for Stagg Hill Pump Station.

"About six months ago the station was found to be built on land which the city didn't own," City Attorney William Frost said.

The city intends to buy about 3300 additional square feet of land from its current owners, so Stagg Hill will be on entirely city land.

City, school district discuss raising Manhattan taxes

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 Board of Education and the Manhattan City Commission met in a joint session Tuesday to discuss a city tax that would pay for schools.

The initiative will be placed on the April 5 ballot.

The agreement calls for a city-wide .25 percent sales tax beginning Oct. 1 in compliance with the Kansas Department of Revenue, and ending on Sept. 30, 2008, unless terminated earlier.

The school board asked to have the initiative on the ballot in order to provide funding to maintain quality education within the district.

Mayor Brad Everett said with the influx of Fort Riley soldiers and their families expected this year and next, a sales tax in the Manhattan area would be necessary to prepare for the additional students.

Despite the unpopularity of the tax among school board officials, board member Randy Martin said it seemed to be the only answer.

"The sales tax is not the best solution from an economic point of view, but it's the only solution we've come up with so far," said Martin.

Although the majority of commissioners agreed that a sales tax was needed, the main issue discussed at the meeting was the duration the tax should be implemented.

City Commissioner Bruce Snead said he felt three years gave the Manhattan governing body reasonable time.

Board Vice President David Colburn echoed Snead's sentiments.

"If this first brigade goes well and we get the second round expected from Europe," he said.

"We need to prepare for the unknown two to three years in advance."

Everett, however, said he was more comfortable with a two-year provision.

"If we have the answers by 2006, why do we need an additional year?" Everett asked.

With a lack of support for a two-year provision, it was decided that the three-year provision would remain intact and was to appear on the ballot.

The only phrase governing board members agreed to eliminate was "sustaining neighborhood schools" under the "Purpose of Proceeds" in the Interlocal Agreement.

School board member Nancy Knopp called to the attention of all governing board members the phrase may be misleading to the public that every building will stay open.

Regardless of the outcome of the vote, City Commissioner Ed Klimek wants a positive light shed on the school situation.

"There's a lot of money in our budget," Klimek said.

"I believe it would be worth the time, effort and money to conduct the study in harmony with the election."

Talk about a radical way to live.

Imagine a life totally devoted to Christ. A life where the rewards you seek are not of this earth. Imagine shunning materialism, realizing there's so much more to life when you follow in the footsteps of Jesus.
We are the sisters of St. Joseph. And it's true, our lives are radically different from the world around us. For ours is a community of vowed women committed to prayer, spiritual growth, and serving others.
We invite you to deepen your relationship with Jesus Christ and join us on our journey.
You may not be entirely certain. And with the many distractions in today's world, it's easy to get sidetracked. But if you listen to your inner voice — if you listen to your heart — you just might find that devoting your life to God as a Sister is the radical way you are being called to live.
Get this free CD-ROM from the Sisters of St. Joseph to help you find out if you've truly been called. To request your CD, call Sister Karen Salsbery, Vocation Minister, or visit us online.

Budding artists perfect skills

K-State grad teaches art to all ages

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A little bit of color is added to Varney's Book Store every Tuesday and Thursday night.

Ben Dickey, K-State graduate in illustration, teaches an art class with students ranging from children to college students.

Supplies are donated by Varney's and the class is free for artists of all ages who would like to join.

Dickey said the class has been in existence for five years and ranges from 10 to 40 students.

"(The program) was so popular for a while we had to cut it down to 40," Dickey said.

The class creates a different artistic media every month from illustrations to wood sculptures and rendering.

Dickey said he encourages new students to sign up by contacting the art department at Varney's.

"People can just show up and have fun," Dickey said. "It's a really laid-back environment, but I do ask people to work and to learn."

Dickey said he has taught the art program for five years because of the people.

"This was my college job when I started to go to school for art," Dickey said.

"I've been doing it so long and I just enjoy it."

Dickey said he also became a teacher because there is not a lot of art in the community and he wanted to promote the arts in Manhattan.

"It gives people a place to come and learn art," Dickey said.

Kyle Klipowicz, senior in math and anthropology, said he began attending the art class because he enjoys learning about creative activities and did not have time in his schedule to take an art class.

"It's good to have something to do that is a diversion from school work," Klipowicz said.

Greek houses participate in open recruitment to meet chapter totals

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For students who are interested in joining a sorority or fraternity but did not do so in the fall, it is not too late.

Continuous open recruitment, COR, is done by nearly all fraternities and those sororities that have not met their chapter membership totals.

So far, Sigma Kappa is the only one of K-State's 11 nationally recognized sororities participating in COR.

Carly Waugh, recruitment coordinator for Panhellenic Council, said Sigma Kappa is able to continue COR until it has met the chapter membership total of 115 set by K-State's Panhellenic Council or until it has met the previous fall's formal recruitment quota of 48 new members.

The recruitment chairs for each chapter participating in COR organize group or individual events according to chapter preference.

Sigma Kappa's 2003-2004 COR Chair Kelly Hunter prefers to invite potential new members to the chapter's Wednesday evening dinners, at which the majority of active members are present.

"We'll go to K-State basketball games or volleyball games. We're doing a Sunday sundae event," Hunter said.

Sigma Kappa President Kristin Ballobin said Sigma Kappa enjoys COR.

"We kind of prefer informal recruitment," Ballobin said.

"We kind of get to know them (potential new members) better."

Even though no cost is associated with COR, as opposed to the $270 fee for Rush Week, Waugh said only approximately 40 women participated in COR in the fall.

Hunter said that during her tenure, Sigma Kappa has had about 45 to 50 women go through COR each semester.

"It's just a lot more laidback (than formal recruitment). It's easier and more comfortable," she said. "The girls we are getting to join are so excited to get involved."

For K-State's 24 fraternities, there are no membership quotas, so COR occurs all year.

However, because fraternity recruitment is typically focused on high school seniors and transfer students, the majority of it takes place in the spring and summer.

The only restriction on fraternity recruitment is a signing deadline for high school seniors.

They cannot sign a fraternity before two weeks prior to dead week of the spring semester.

"Greek Affairs is trying, as a Greek community, to help each other out. With the signing date it gives them the opportunity to see other chapters.

"It levels the playing field," said Interfraternity Council Director of Recruitment Brian Nelson.

"It gives potential new members a chance to see every chapter and it gives every chapter a chance to see all the potential new members."

For men, fraternity recruitment includes small events like barbecues, pool tournaments, and visits to the fraternity house.

"It's a very, very laidback process," Nelson said.

Delta Upsilon President Matt Spexarth said his fraternity has three events planned.

"We do large events to try to attract a lot of people and then narrow it down from there," Spexarth said. "We'll take a lot of them out to eat for more one-on-one."

With a fall pledge class of 32 and a spring class of nine, Spexarth said DU has not needed to advertise.

"Mostly it's word-of-mouth, especially with the spring pledge class," he said. "It's pretty informal. We'll be as interested in you as you are in us."

Beta Theta Pi primarily uses the spring semester to begin recruiting high school seniors.

The fraternity hosts paintball tournament and a weekend outing to the Spring Game.

Additionally, active members will often travel with the fraternity's recruitment chair to the hometowns of high school seniors to take potential new members out to dinner.

"It (recruitment) is an all-house effort," President Brad Scheu said.

Scheu said Beta will probably sign the approximately 25 men who will make up its fall pledge class by the end of this semester.

COR for sororities is governed by Panhellenic Council, while the IFC oversees COR for the fraternities.

For students interested in COR, forms are available online at www.ksu.edu/greek.

Men interested in joining a fraternity are also encouraged to contact the fraternities directly.

Poor grades can be replaced with retake

Students can repeat courses up to 5 times

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students who are unhappy with their grade have the option to retake the class.

Ricky Wigton, junior in geography, retook Chemistry I, because, like many others, he was not satisfied with his grade.

He said retaking a class was beneficial.

"Unless you did absolutely nothing your first time through, you should have a pretty solid grasp on the material, so it's easy to do and definitely worth the effort," Wigton said.

According to K-State's Web site, the original grade is removed from the grade point average, and a retake notice "R" will be noted.

The transcript will still reflect that the student has taken the class again, but the retaken grade received will be the only one that affects the GPA.

Eddi Devore, records supervisor at the Office of the Registrar, explains the retake policy further.

"The second grade is the grade that is counted in the GPA regardless of whether it is higher or lower," Devore said.

Devore said that retakes may be accomplished by re-enrolling in and finishing a K-State course.

A retaken course will count only once toward meeting degree requirements.

Also, there is no limit to the number of times a course may be retaken, but students may only retake up to five courses. If a student must retake more than five courses, then both the original grade and the retake grade will then appear on the transcript.

The transcript will still reflect that the student has taken the class again, but the retaken grade received will be the only one that affects the GPA.

Overall, when it comes to retaking classes, many instructors find themselves concerned more with the student's knowledge rather than the grade received.

Larry Erickson, professor of chemical engineering, encourages students to retake classes whenever there is something to be gained in the understanding of the material.

"There are times when it is appropriate for students to retake courses and there are times when other options would be better, but I always look at the particular need of the student," Erickson said.

Either way, retaking courses in which one has not received a satisfactory grade shows determination and an educational motivation that colleges and employers alike will value, Erickson said.

Larry Moeder, director of Admissions and Student Financial Assistance, said he agrees.

"(By retaking a class) it's a positive image that the student is presenting, because they took the effort to improve, and this shows that they are probably going to succeed at Kansas State," said Moeder.

Rec Complex offers new exercise classes, equipment

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

New Wildcat Workout sessions at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex will allow patrons to exercise to a different beat.

This is due to the two new workout classes: Hip Hop and Cardio Blast. Hip Hop will include hip hop moves combined with upbeat music and Cardio Blast will have a variety of moves from the Step, Kickboxing, Boot Camp, Hip Hop and High/Low classes.

Renae Johnston, sophomore in dance, said she is excited about the new classes.

"That's awesome," she said. "I'll definitely go. I've always danced so I like to keep in shape."

Johnston said classes are a way to keep her motivated and guide her exercise.

Along with new classes, patrons will also be able to use new equipment.

Dumbbells have been ordered for this semester, but will not arrive until later this month.

Derek Walters, assistant director of recreational services at the Rec Complex, said the dumbbells ordered will range from 7.5 pounds to 50 pounds and there will be two sets of each.

"We were having to replace things on the old ones all the time," he said.

Jeff Norris, sophomore in secondary education, said he didn't think new dumbbells would affect his workout.

"I don't really think it would make a difference, they'd be replacing just to replace," Norris said.

The Rec Complex has also decided to not leave people to working out in the dark anymore.

This is due to the acquisition of fluorescent lights all throughout the Rec Complex. More than 350 lights have been replaced.

Walters said a grant through the energy company was used to install more efficient lighting.

Among the new additions, the spring break training program will also be taking place at the Rec Complex this semester. This six-week program allows the person to meet with a consultant and set a workout schedule and diet.

The Rec Complex also offers a variety of intramural sports that can be found online.

wrote his obituary and would be the best indicator of how Camarena should be remembered.

"Christopher's infectious smile and bright spirit were a joy to all that knew and loved him. He knew no strangers, he was a friend to all," his obituary reads.

A scholarship fund has been started at Rockhurst High School, where Camarena graduated in May.

Schrotberger said he has been a friend of the family for about 20 years and was happy to help the family in any way he could in their time of need.

Reed said students who were friends of Camarena are encouraged to call the Office of Student Life for any support or to assist in planning a possible memorial service.

"People are encouraged to contact our office and let us know their wishes leading to a possible campus memorial. When we are told about what students want to see, we will respond to their wishes," Reed said.

"Christopher's infectious smile and bright spirit were a joy to all that knew and loved him."

Reed and Bosco said Camarena's death was the only K-State student death they were aware of.

Reed said most long breaks, when students travel frequently, result in deaths.

"Overall, tragedy-wise, we've not lost as many as usual," Reed said.

"There's always a larger chance of accidents when there's a larger number of students out traveling."

TSUNAMI | Coast line damage reaches 10 miles inland with mudslides with his life.

"He saw the first wave and ran before the second wave arrived," he said. "He was from the southern coastal region of Sri Lanka."

Some parents do not know where their children were that morning, Cader said, because young couples would lie about going to the beach.

"They would say they were going to study," he said, "and in reality they would walk with each other across the beach."

Another of the hardest hit groups in Sri Lanka was the homeless, Cader said.

"The homeless would have illegal wooden shelters on the southwest coast and find jobs there," he said.

"The government is going to require shelters be at least 300 meters inland but I do not think that is enough," he said, "because they will still be at risk due to the low lying area."

Holloway said Sri Lankans are so caring, selfless and family-oriented that the devastating loss of loved ones will affect them tragically.

"It hit them so hard that it is probably affecting their soul," she said. "But their faith is so strong that they will be able to overcome this."

Sri Lanka is also distinct because of its religious diversity, Cader said.

"One thing to note is that this disaster hit everybody equally, despite religion or race," he said.

PHYSICAL EFFECTS

Geography professor Bimal Paul said in every country the coastal areas were the most affected.

Erosion, mudslides and landslides all caused the coast to be washed away up to 10 miles inland, he said.

The effect of the tsunami was more economic than physical, Paul said, but it did shift a few Indonesian islands a couple of meters north.

Paul's home country of Bangladesh was saved from devastation because of the shallow waters in the Bay of Bengal, the coral reefs and the mangrove forest.

"People are clearing the mangrove forest to harvest shrimp and prawn," he said. "If they let it thrive it could have saved lives."

Another factor that could have saved lives is a warning system, he said. There is one established for the Pacific Ocean, but not the Indian Ocean, where the tsunami hit.

"In order to establish it, the small countries like Sri Lanka will need American help," he said. "They will also look to the United Nations or Japan."

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Hanas Cader, graduate student in agricultural economics, has family just outside Sri Lanka. Cader was worried about the safety of his family when the deadly tsunami it on Dec. 26.

UNIVERSITY RESPONSE

Students or faculty who are personally affected have various avenues to turn to, one of which is the Office of Diversity Programs in the College of Agriculture, Holloway said.

"If any students need me, I'm there for them," she said. "Our office is willing to help any minority group."

Her office is working closely with the Office of Diversity and Dual Career Development to assist students in any way possible, she said.

The Indian Student Association, which includes students from Sri Lanka, is working on raising awareness about the tragedy.

"Awareness is more important at this point than fundraising," he said. "So many organizations are already raising money."

If people want to donate money, the Flint Hills American Red Cross is accepting donations. Director of Operations Jason Lantz said local residents have already contributed nearly $7,000.

The best way to help financially is through the American Red Cross International Response Fund, he said. Donations may be sent to the Flint Hills Red Cross through (800) HELP-NOW or through www.redcross.org

SEBELIUS | Governor puts emphasis on schools

is what Sebelius referred to as "dumb(ing) down" education.

Jones said she hopes that this is not the case.

"It is important to have a well-rounded educational experience including having food for children to eat, nursing and counseling programs, art and music programs and places for children to stay after school."

Jones continued to say that a good education program is the foundation of the success of the state.

"Quality schools equals quality students," Jones said.

Education was the main topic of Sebelius' speech, but other large issues such as health care and military benefits were addressed.

Sebelius wants to see a $50 million increase in health care financed by raising the price of cigarette and tobacco products by 50 cents.

Aistrup said that there will be both positive and negative reactions to this proposed tax.

He also said that Sebelius must be flexible with her budget regarding health care because its has a tendency to increase dynamically.

The success of the health care plan depends on the school finance issue.

It may drown out the issues of health care because the added spending and emphasis on schools will make such a program more difficult to pass.

"Health care is not DOA, but it's also not a sure bet," Aistrup said.

Another important part of the speech was the emphasis on a Military Rights Bill allowing help to soldiers returning from overseas.

Aistrup said he predicts that the bill will not have any problem being passed through the Legislature, but more specifics about the bill will need to be filled.

Aistrup said this year is both an interesting legislative session and "one of the most significant sessions we've had."

MARRIAGE | Amendment vote expected later this week in Senate amendments like this one."

Schmidt said the sponsors of the amendment see it differently.

"They don't believe that the old law is efficient, because it's subject to review and could be struck down in the future," he said.

"The new amendment should help prevent that from happening."

The proposal requires a two-thirds vote to pass in both the Senate and the House of Representatives. If passed in both legislative bodies, it requires a majority vote in a statewide election.

James Spence, junior in economics, said he believes it probably will pass.

"The voters shouldn't allow social stance to limit one's rights or influence them economically, but if that's what the people want, it will happen because that's how government works," he said.

Tiffany Bliesner, second-year graduate student in speech pathology, said she would vote in favor of the amendment.

"Maybe I have old-fashioned values and morals, but marriage is suppose to be between a man and a woman," she said.

"The adoption of the proposal would help keep it that way."

semesters and can use the calendar to schedule games."

The service will also allow students to search for drink specials in Aggieville, create group pages, check the weather in Manhattan or Salina and participate in a virtual market.

"It's like a free eBay for students," Chris Althoff, project leader, said. "Students will have the chance to buy or sell things, and if a category doesn't exist, they can submit a request for a category."

The site provides links to important K-State Web sites, such as KATS, K-State Online, SafeRide and Lafene Health Center, as well as links to a K-State/Google search engine.

The Web site was given a $35,000 one-time allocation out of the Information Technology budget for start up costs.

"Our goal, now that we're up and running, is to make it easier to approach the tuition-centered enhancement money," Urkevich said. "In order to keep the site maintained, we tentatively need around $45,000."

The money mainly will be used for the six paid staff members and hardware costs — which are one-time fees.

WIN is offered only to students and at no cost.

Smaller Wildcats dominate paint

Women beat Missouri

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Before Tuesday night's 87-44 thrashing of Missouri, teams with a height advantage had been a nemesis of sorts for the No. 23 K-State women's basketball team.

In losses to Duke and Liberty, the Wildcats were faced with a definite height disadvantage against players like Duke's 6-foot-7 Alison Bales and Liberty's 6-foot-8 Katie Feenstra.

Such was not the case against the Tigers.

Even though Missouri (7-7, 1-2) started three players 6-foot-1 or taller, the Wildcats (11-3, 2-1) dominated down low, outscoring the Tigers 38-12 in the paint while owning a 44-21 rebounding edge.

Head coach Deb Patterson said the Wildcats' inside game was the key to performing as well as they did.

"We knew coming into the game that we'd have to defend very well and try to compensate for the size that they had in their front line and that we would have to board the ball," Patterson said. "I thought tonight was one of our better performances in terms of being fundamental, keeping (Missouri) from getting second chance opportunities, getting to the ball quick and you can see the results."

Senior Brie Madden came off the bench to provide an added offensive spark as she collected eight points and five rebounds in just 13 minutes of play.

Madden, combined with freshman Shana Wheeler - who started her second consecutive Big 12 game- and senior Kendra Wecker, used solid defense and superior speed to wear down the Missouri post players.

Missouri's second leading scorer Christelle N'Garsanet was held scoreless in just 10 minutes of play, partially due to a foot injury. Starter EeTisha Riddle finished the game with just one made field goal.

Madden said playing against good post players is something the Wildcats are used to.

"It's important every game to take away the inside game," Madden said. "The Big 12 is full of incredible posts. Every team has a stout post player. We've played against great ones already and we're going to come up against some incredible posts and we've got to be ready and work hard."

Wecker led the Wildcats with 12 rebounds to go along with her game high 25 points, giving her a double-double for the fifth time in the six games she has played since returning from an ankle injury.

Wecker said getting rebounds has been a focal point for her since returning to the line-up.

"Rebounding, that's an attitude," she said. "That's something that you, on both ends of the floor, just have to be aggressive (about) and I've really been trying to focus on that these last few games."

and rebounding leader, will likely be less than 100 percent.

Massey was able to score 12 points in 25 minutes against the Cornhuskers, but was still experiencing swelling and soreness following the game, according to Wooldridge.

"He's expected to play, but we don't know how much," Wooldridge said.

Tonight, Martin, Massey and the rest of the Wildcats will be facing a Texas Tech squad that has shown it can compete with top teams in the country.

Legendary head coach Bob Knight's Red Raiders led No. 6 Oklahoma State 36-27 at halftime, and were within two points with 2:50 remaining, before falling 76-66 to the Cowboys at home.

"They're a tough team. It looks like to me they play well together and play a team-brand of basketball," Wooldridge said. "I watched the Oklahoma State game and thought they just played outstanding."

Texas Tech features a balanced offensive attack – five players average double figures – led by senior guard Ronald Ross' 13.8 points per game on 54 percent field goal shooting.

For the Wildcats, shaking off Saturday's disappointing defeat could be as difficult as dealing with Knight's squad.

"This will be tough since it's league play and a road loss. It'll be tough for us to bounce back from," Peete said after scoring 13 points against the Huskers.

But Martin said the team should have little problem regrouping.

"We're going to come back (tonight)," he said.

"We're going to have to bounce back from this loss and come back stronger and play even harder."

Project focuses on urbanizing Aggieville district

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Aggieville became more student-friendly last month with the construction of high-density housing.

The construction along Bluemont and North Manhattan avenues is part of the Aggieville Campus Edge project.

Now the project's leaders are working to create partnerships through private meetings with Aggieville property owners to keep the project moving forward, said Jeff Levin of the Aggieville Business Association.

Levin said the city wants to meet again with the group to further discuss the project.

The project is aimed at urbanizing Aggieville by adding student housing as well as parking garages. Another important factor, though, is making Aggieville into what it used to be: a one-stop shopping place that is a close walk or bike ride away.

"You always have to re-evaluate where you're at," Levin said. "There are a lot of dynamic changes going on in the east and west side of Manhattan and downtown. Aggieville needs a shot in the arm."

An important change involves parking issues.

Levin said it is standard to have four parking spots per 1,000 square feet of building space. In Aggieville, the average is two parking spots. Due to Aggieville's layout, though, Levin said the only way to create more parking is to build up, not out, in the form of a garage.

A parking garage, along with an apartment complex, could be built along the "keystone block," the corner of Manhattan and Bluemont avenues. Another possibility includes the construction of a parking garage on the existing lot next to Varney's, Levin said.

He said the parking garages on Bluemont Avenue could be accessible to students as well as apartment renters, while the garage next to Varney's could also be accessible to visitors.

A second change includes making Aggieville more visible to visitors and residents.

"A lot of people, when they drive down Bluemont and don't know Aggieville is there, think it looks like a strip mall," Levin said. "Our hope is to guide direction."

City Commissioner Bruce Snead said he is looking forward to the full development of the plan, which could take months, considering any significant plan usually takes six months to one year or longer to fully develop.

"This is keeping Aggieville vibrant," Snead said. "It's a well thought out and considered plan that takes interest in all stake holders."

Levin said he has received mixed reviews about the project from Aggieville business and area property owners, but is collaborating all concerns to come up with a solution.

Brent Aldridge, manager of Bluestem Bistro, said he is not in full support of the project. He said Aggieville as it is now should be improved before or during the expansion across Bluemont Avenue.

"We can't forget the existing Aggieville," Aldridge said.

Another concern is new business along Bluemont may take away from the older Aggieville.

Aldridge said he is in favor of the parking garage features, and he would rather developments happen near Aggieville and campus versus other places in Manhattan.

"I'm more in favor of doing that than I am of developing out by Wal-Mart," he said.

Convenience store robbed; no arrests made

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A man entered Shop Quik Store at 2028 Tuttle Creek Blvd. early Wednesday and left the store with a cash register.

The suspect was described as a white man, 5-foot-6 to 5-foot-7, in his early 20s with a thin build and bright blue eyes which were described as "considerably bloodshot."

He brandished a knife and then exited the building with the cash register and its contents, Riley County Police Capt. John Doehling said in a news release.

The suspect also has a beard. Doehling said in the release that the suspect was last seen leaving the store on foot wearing a black hooded sweatshirt and blue jeans.

The amount of cash missing is unknown; however, according to the release, the cash register was valued at $200.

According to the release, no arrests have been made and no property has been recovered.

The robbery comes less than a year after a store in the same block was robbed.

At about 2 a.m. on June 14, 2004, the Short Stop convenience store at 2010 Tuttle Creek Blvd. was robbed. Vernal Taylor, 25, of Topeka was arrested later that evening in connection with the crime.

Riley County Police are asking anyone with any information on the Shop Quik robbery to call the department at 537-2112.

Restaurants keep traditions, offer cultural experience

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Only one wall separates the two restaurants.

One wall that provides its guests with two completely different cultural experiences.

Hibachi Hut and Texas Star Cafe have been a favorite of Manhattan eaters over the years.

On the Hibachi Hut side, wooden walls, dimmed lights and Cajun paraphernalia give guests the Creole experience. Texas Star, on the other hand, welcomes guests with its vibrant, red and yellow Tex-Mex hues across the walls.

Hibachi Hut moved into its Aggieville location in 1959. In 1985, Texas Star was added on to the popular restaurant under the leadership of former owner John Heritage.

Jared Becker, co-owner of Hibachi Hut and Texas Star, along with his brother, Kale, and his parents, Bill and Sandra, took over the restaurants last July from Heritage, who owned the businesses for the last 20 years.

The secret of both restaurants' success, Jared Becker said, first comes from its Aggieville location.

"We're in a pretty beneficial spot," Becker said, with Rusty's, Kite's and Auntie Mae's Parlor in close proximity.

Most importantly, though, the restaurants' success has been attributed to the minimal amount of change over the years – namely the menus, which were put together with help from Bud and Bobby Cox, owners of Cox Bros BBQ and Coco Bolos restaurants.

"We keep everything as close as possible with what they had," Jared Becker said.

There's such a minimal change, in fact, that many customers come back after 15 years away and find their favorites still on the menu, Kale Becker said.

High-energy smoothie stand, hamburger grill to give students new meal options at Union

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students eating in the K-State Student Union will have more food choices this semester.

Mean Gene's Burgers has been replaced by All Star Players' Wildcat Grill. General Nutrition Center also will serve All-Natural Performance Smoothies from a kiosk on the first floor of the Union, outside of the food court.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said All-Natural Performance Smoothies will be available beginning Jan. 12. However, the grand opening for All Star Players' Wildcat Grill will be on Jan. 19.

In the past, the Union had no choice in what was served at Mean Gene's Burgers because they had to buy Mean Gene's products. Now they have the option of being more creative with the menu at All Star Players' Wildcat Grill.

"There'll still be hamburgers, but their goal is to broaden the selection a little bit," said Connaughton.

In most food court environments, hamburgers are the best-selling item, but they did not do as well at Mean Gene's Burgers, said Tina Griffin, food service director for the Union.

"It was not very successful," Griffin said.

The Union hopes All Star Players Wildcat Grill will be more successful because

DIVERSIONS

A WASTE OF TIME — BUT HEY, IT'S BETTER THAN LECTURE

Which bar fits you best?

Each Aggieville bar has its own personality. Find out which one caters to your partying style.

Rusty's

"It's real diverse here, more diverse than others, because this is the biggest bar. Each of the four buildings have different characteristics."

Last Chance: "The front bar area is a big melting pot. There's everyone from ag students to people who like hip-hop."

Outback: "Outback has more of an older crowd. They're more hard rocking, as far as drinking goes."

Next Door: "Next Door has more ag students. It's calmer and a little more mature."

The Other Side: "The Other Side is more of a younger crowd. Most of them are ages 21 to 22, they're basically people who are new to the bar scene."
— Matt Schwartz, bartender

Known for: The Big Beer

From the customer: "It has good food and good atmosphere. Things are in tune with what goes on at campus. There's also a lot of loyal and great K-State fans. When you're out of town, it's nice having a warm place like Rusty's to come back to."
— Les Chaves, Manhattan resident

Kite's Bar and Grill

"Most of the people who come here are alumni and greek."
— Jennifer McLaughlin, server

Known for: Red Bull and vodka, rum and Cokes for $1, Sunday through Thursday.

From the customer: "We like the food, it's really good. The waitresses are cute and there's good service. Plus, it's been established; it's been here for a while."
— Jeff Gragson, junior in criminology

Hibachi Hut and Texas Star Cafe

"The major crowd here is local people. We have a lot of repeat customers. An example is that if a family comes to town, they go to the Hibachi Hut because that's where their dad took them.

"We tend to have a more older crowd, including graduate students, but not as many college students."
— Kale Becker, co-owner

Known for: Pat O'Brien's Hurricane mix.

From the customer: "We come here because we live across the street. Plus they have good food. It's not crazy packed. If you have to wait, it isn't long, and the service is good."
— Sheilah Nath, senior in psychology and family studies

Auntie Mae's

"We get a lot of college kids and older crowds. We also get a lot of band people. People who play in bands come in here a lot."
— Matt Bargabus, bartender

Known for: The Tarantula

Rock-a-Belly Bar & Deli

"I think we have a lot more regulars. A lot of older people, but it's diverse for the most part."
— Lyndsey Schooley, server

From the customer: "The food is really good, and I really like the atmosphere. I really like the decorations and everything."
— Meagan Hawthorne, sophomore in Spanish

So Long Saloon

"It's pretty diverse. Everything from hippies to greek people. We have a lot of late night people who stick around because we close later than some of the other bars."
— Seth Stone, bartender

Known for: Bloody Marys

From the customer: "I go here because (my friends) work here."
— Jason Harper, senior in marketing

Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque

"We get a lot of greek people. Tuesday night we have our signature pitcher night, and that appeals to a lot of the greek crowd, I imagine.

"We have a lot more rock music, and it's not so much of a dance scene. We have pool in the back, food during the day and a lot of local (band) groups at night."
— Nate Elniff, bartender

Known for: Pitchers of beer, $2 domestic, $3 premium

From the customers: "They have great drink specials. I come here more for the pool. They only have one table, but there are some really good players that play here, and I like to play them. But there's a great atmosphere and there's a lot of room."
— Greg Shosa, Manhattan resident

Buffalo Wild Wings

"It's diverse here. It's a mix of different types of people. Last night we had in the basketball team."
— Tim Stewart, assistant general manager

Known for: beer. "We have 20 tapped beers," Stewart said.

From the customer: "Trivia and cheap wings. I think they're cheaper on Wednesdays. The atmosphere is good too, but I mainly go for the cheap wings and trivia."
— Billy Fogo, Manhattan resident

Coco Bolos

"We mainly have family crowds. We focus on family crowds during the day, but there are some college kids at night."
— Emily Diehl, server and junior in hotel restaurant management

Known for: Sangria and margaritas

Record flight to take off

Airplane launch sponsored by K-State-Salina

By Jeremy Dautenhahn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State-Salina will sponsor one of the biggest aviation events to date in an attempt to fly an airplane solo around the world without refueling.

Along with the Salina Municipal Airport, K-State-Salina was selected to be the launch and landing site, as well as mission control for the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer.

The trip was originally scheduled for late 2004 but was rescheduled.

It will most likely take place within the next month; however, no official date has been announced.

Salina was chosen over a long list of possible sites because of the geographic location and brand new 12,300 foot runway, one of the longest in North America.

Dennis Kuhlman, dean of the College of Technology and Aviation, said the event is huge for K-State-Salina.

"I cannot express how excited we are to host the GlobalFlyer project in the community of Salina, not to mention having mission control on our campus," he said.

GlobalFlyer

K-State-Salina will sponsor an attempt by a GlobalFlyer airplane pilot to fly solo around the world without refueling.

Twelve K-State students were selected to be on the mission control support team. They will perform duties ranging from general plane maintenance to communication with the Federal Aviation Administration. These students were chosen based on their professionalism and scholastic performance.

Seth Short, senior in aviation, said he is honored to be a part of the mission control team.

"This is something that so few people get to be a part of, and it's almost inconceivable to myself that I get to be one of the lucky few," he said.

Steve Fossett, the world renowned navigator and record breaker, will be flying the plane. Fossett has been breaking world records for years in gliders, balloons, sailboats and powered aircraft.

In 2002, Fossett was awarded the FAI Gold Medal, the highest award in the field of aviation.

If the trip is successful, it will be completed in fewer than 80 hours. The single-engine jet plane is built entirely out of lightweight composite material and is designed to carry more than four times its own weight in fuel in its 13 tanks.

The plane will attempt to fly 23,000 miles at 45,000 feet above sea level at speeds in excess of 285 mph.

The GlobalFlyer is funded by Virgin Atlantic tycoon Richard Branson. Branson is the star of the hit TV show Rebel Billionaire and is the owner of Virgin Records, Virgin Mobile and Virgin Atlantic Airways.

Branson is not a newcomer to the record books. In 1986 he set the record for the fastest crossing of the Atlantic Ocean in his boat, the Virgin Atlantic Challenger II. In 1987, Branson became the first person to fly across the Atlantic with his balloon, the Virgin Atlantic Flyer.

The GlobalF er was designed by aviation i vator Burt Rutan.

Rutan recently received worldwide notoriety for his plane SpaceShipOne, successfully becoming the first privately funded aircraft to enter outer-space.

Ice means more towing business

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Recent snow and ice storms have caused concern for many drivers, residents and commercial businesses.

Because of the weather, towing and ice removal services in and around Manhattan are keeping busy.

Susan LaMasper, executive secretary at Wildcat Wrecker Service, said she had taken in almost 200 calls in the past month.

"If you know you need to be towed, we require your name, phone number, a good description of your vehicle and the location," LaMasper said. "Make sure your car is completely off of the traffic line and use emergency flashes."

LaMasper said if your car is on the road, the police require it to be removed within 48 hours.

"It is probably better to call the wrecker service rather than remove it yourself with a chain because it might cause more damage," LaMasper said.

Another problem with ice is driving on parking lots, said Scott Miller, owner of Perfection Lawn & Landscape, which offers a snow and ice removal service to several commercial businesses around Manhattan.

Miller said in removing the ice from the lots, they first presalt them before the weather hits and scrape them afterwards.

"Just be careful when driving in a parking lot. Don't accelerate and drive cautiously, even if it doesn't look slick," Miller said.

Perfection can also take personal calls after the lots have been serviced, Miller said.

Gary Niehaus, owner of Custom Lawn & Landscape, said they have been staying busy as well during the past month.

"We do ice removal service for restaurants, hotels, groceries and shopping centers," Niehaus said.

"It's important that people need to be aware that the ice is out there," he said.

USD 383 considers charter school plan

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Debate about the creation of the Theodore Roosevelt charter school was heated at the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 Board of Education meeting Wednesday night.

Keith Miller, a presenter of the petition to make Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School a charter school, said submitting it to the state would allow another year to educate the pubic.

The school board voted to close the school for the 2006-2007 school year at board meetings last fall before considering it for a charter school.

Nancy Knopp, board member, said she'd like to see the proposal advance to the state level.

"We don't know if people are going to like the idea or not, but what's the downside of allowing this to take the next step," she said.

"It's not like a train going down a hill that we can't stop. If the idea isn't attractive to people, then it won't go on."

A motion passed 5-2 to hold a public reading on Feb. 2.

Randy Martin, board member, voted in favor of the motion, but said he had doubts about the petition.

"There is a lot of work left to be done," he said.

"I don't want the paradigm to be focused on the state's approval when it should be focused on the community approval."

In other business, a motion passed to research the preservation of Bluemont School.

If Bluemont is placed on the National Register of Historic Places, it could provide grant money to the district, which could be used to renovate the school.

Kathy Dzewaltowski, Manhattan resident, said preserving Bluemont would benefit Manhattan.

"It's about preserving our history and education," she said. "I hope you will pursue this because I think education is a significant part in the community."

Martin, who voted against the motion, said the decision should not be based on temporary funding.

"I'm against this motion because we are going to let a short time grant availability influence our school district for many, many years," he said.

TO THE POINT

Union officials right to put students as deciding factor in restaurant changes

It's nice to see K-State officials responding to students.

The K-State Student Union will replace Mean Gene's Burgers with All Star Players' Wildcat Grill.

The restaurant will feature more menu options including hamburgers, chicken sandwiches and Greek food.

Mean Gene's wasn't making money. In this case, students voiced their opinions by choosing where to spend their money.

It was time for something different.

Union officials responded.

In the Food Court's recent history, students have been put first.

The return of Taco Bell and the opening of new restaurants have been based on student feedback.

The new smoothie machine on the first floor of the Union shows a response to a new health conscience.

The recent updates to the Union food court offer students a variety of new and improved food choices.

While lunch options are only a small part of K-State, it's refreshing to have students as one of the deciding factors in the changes that have been implemented.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Call for action

Americans can fight for human rights issues without going to war

Illustrations by Amanda Dinkel | COLLEGIAN

The U.S. invasion of Iraq has sparked controversy both in the United States and abroad. Few doubt that Saddam Hussein is an evil man who should not govern a country. However, the debate has become whether or not the United States was justified in using force to remove Saddam Hussein from power.

AARON DUNCAN

What if it would have been possible to limit Saddam Hussein's power without using force? Amnesty International and other human rights organizations argue that the international community could have done just that by promoting human rights.

In his 2002 book, "In Our Own Best Interest: How Defending Human Rights Benefits us All," Dr. William F. Schultz claims that the greatest threat to the international community is human rights violations. He argues that by promoting and protecting human rights around the world, the citizens of the world could achieve greater economic growth, health and security.

The Economist of April 12, 1997, explains, "Political freedom tends to go hand in hand with economic freedom, which in turn tends to bring international trade and prosperity. And governments that treat their own people with tolerance and respect tend to treat their neighbors in the same way." History has reaffirmed this point time and time again, and many contemporaries agree that human violations directly affect the United States.

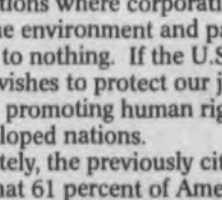
The African News Service of April 18, 2002, explains that Americans are increasingly concerned about the exporting of U.S. jobs overseas to lesser developed nations where corporations can exploit the environment and pay workers next to nothing. If the U.S. government wishes to protect our jobs, it ought to be promoting human rights in lesser developed nations.

Unfortunately, the previously cited book states that 61 percent of Americans said that what happens in Western Europe and Asia does not impact their lives. Moreover, only 39 percent of Americans believe that promoting human rights ought to be a U.S. foreign policy goal.

There are a number of ways each of us can help. The first is to write letters and e-mails. Amnesty International's Web site posts the results of its letter writing campaigns. In the past year, the organization has claimed victories in such countries as China, Mexico and Thailand.

To get involved, all you need to do is visit Amnesty's Web site, www.amnestyusa.org, and go to the action center. There you can access a list of causes and prewritten letters.

You will also find Amnesty's explanation that U.S. citizens are uniquely empowered to write these letters because we live in the most powerful country in the world, and other governments are uniquely concerned about what U.S. citizens think and uniquely fearful of what our government might do.



If you don't agree with everything Amnesty does, there are other organizations with which you can become involved. Many of these organizations try to help specific types of people like women or children or are composed of specific groups of people like Doctors Without Borders or Human Rights First.

Harry Truman put it best more than 50 years ago when he told the world, "Circumstances change, but the great issues remain the same –prosperity, welfare, human rights, effective democracy and, above all, peace." If the world wants peace in this region, it ought to remember the words of Truman, and promote human rights in the Middle East.

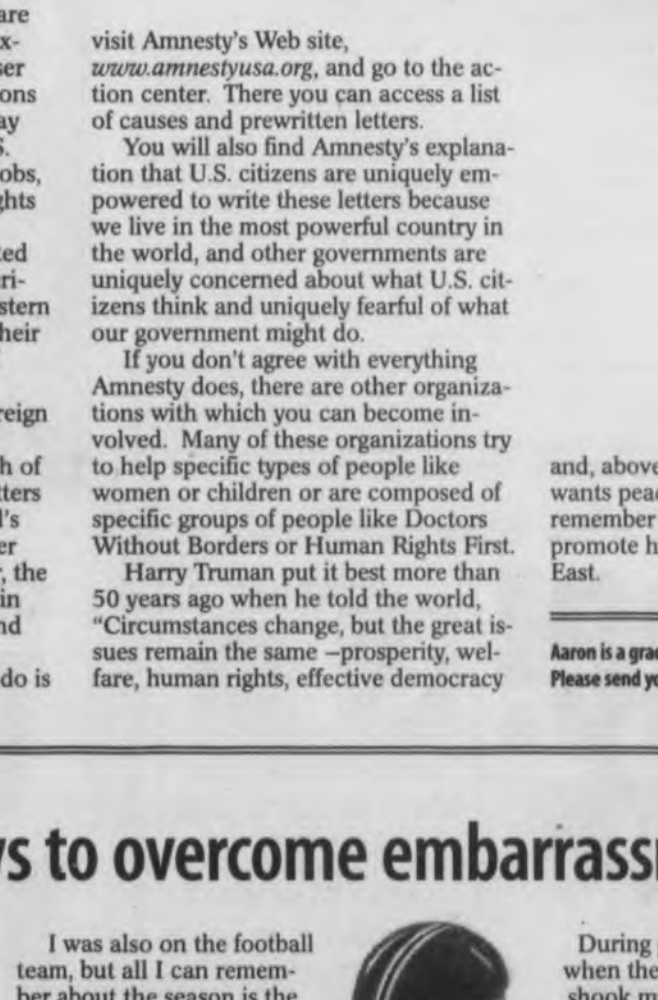
Columnist vows to overcome embarrassments of high school

Like most college students, my life peaked in high school. Sadly, this isn't a very flattering appraisal of my life.

GRANT REICHERT

The highest points of my high school career were that time at lunch when I got an extra beef finger – turned out it was actually the cook's finger, and it didn't taste that good anyway – and the time I figured out that if I held my breath for about a minute and stood up really fast, I could instantly teleport myself to the nurse's office.



I guess I was in the yearbook, which I'll count as a peak.

Of course, I helped make it with all the cool kids, but I still had to earn my spot in the yearbook, just like everyone else.

I had some tough competition from that shy kid who collected ceramic ducks and smelled like fish sticks, but I beat him out at the last second.

OK, I snuck in and changed the page layout myself for a prime spot on page 237, right next to a picture of our heroic janitorial staff and that odd-shaped rock someone found in the parking lot.

I was also on the football team, but all I can remember about the season is the coach kneeling over me, waving his hands in front of my eyes and saying to the assistant coach in a surprised voice, "Well I'll be... he is alive.

I guess I owe you a Coke." That, and spending months learning how to walk and talk again, as well as how not to wet myself (I'm still a work in progress here, but laziness is a factor, highlighted my high school career.

During graduation, when the principal shook my hand and said "I'm going to miss you, Brent," I could've sworn his eyes were misting over.

Yeah, the school is probably feeling my absence. I can hear them in the halls now, holding back tears and wailing, "Whatever happened to that one creepy kid that used to wear a cape to school?"

The bathroom graffiti has probably lost the witty edge it once had under my editorial leadership. I wouldn't stop until the job was done right. Or until my legs fell asleep. Whichever.

The lewd picture, advanced by lavatory luminary Michelangelo "David" Buonarroti, finally, under my guidance, had its meaning changed from the simplistic "look at me, I'm crudely drawn and naked!" to the suave, politically imbued, "Look at me, I'm crudely drawn and naked; vote Republican!"

My legacy lives on in the various nudity-related regulations passed by the school during my senior year.

It's not my fault; I didn't think they would know that I was naked, since I was invisible at the time – this being a low point of my football recovery. Cape must've given me away.

It's all downhill since those high school glory days. Guess I could start looking for a nice place to roll over and expire.

I just can't decide between Florida and a shallow back country ditch. On one hand, there's Disney World and sunny weather; on the other hand, there's a shallow ditch.

Or maybe I can still make something of college.

Sure I won't be able to make the football squad wait... have they filled the Radio slot yet?) or even in the yearbook (paying for popularity in that way just feels so unclean), but I'd say my chances of finding a body part in my cafeteria meal are pretty good.

Someone needs to tell Chris Althoff the difference between a portal and a Web page with links.

When are girls going to figure out that we don't care if they think it's cool when we peel out? We just like doing it.

They're fluffety, they're puffety, they're Fluffy Puff Marshmallows.

Architorture, separating the living from the undead.

Is it OK for your boyfriend to call his ex-girlfriend every night when he gets drunk? I don't think so.

The drive thru at the Westloop McDonald's sucks.

My roommate was attacked by a washing machine this weekend.

Football, basketball, you know, I think it's time us rednecks get a whisky drinkin' scholarship.

To the person complaining about the "parking nazis": If your English skills were better, maybe you could read and understand the parking rules and avoid a parking ticket.

Ok, whining, gloating, whatever. Remember this rule: If you can't say anything new to the Fourum, don't say anything at all.

It is never too cold for jean skirts.

No matter how much everyone tries to go on about how great Bush's national security record is, you have to remember one thing — 9/11 happened on his watch.

Board of Regents to review English skills of instructors

Audit reveals 31 percent of graduate teaching assistants lack proficiency

By Nate Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas Board of Regents will be taking on the long-standing issue of English proficiency at Kansas universities during Jan. 15 and 16 meetings at its Topeka office.

Most recently, this debate has concerned the issue of testing. The board is responsible for setting the requirements for testing and interviewing used when recruiting prospective graduate teaching assistants and faculty.

Dave Van Domelen, director of instructional support in the physics department, said that K-State is functioning to the best of its ability and that any drastic changes would be too expensive – leading to further problems.

"The university is like an engine that can't be turned off...or overhauled," Van Domelen said.

An audit conducted by the Legislative Division of the Post Audit took place Dec. 7 within the departments of Business, Mathematics, English and Political Science in all Kansas universities. An executive summary of this audit was presented before the Kansas Legislature on Dec. 13.

The audit discovered that 31 percent of all GTAs and faculty had not undergone any form of assessment while others lacked proper documentation.

There are some difficulties with improving English proficiency through current testing requirements, said Mary Wood, director of the English Language Program.

Wood said that the required SPEAK test, while accurate in evaluating spoken English, doesn't test overall teaching ability. Many of the GTAs who are proficient in spoken and written English have other issues when placed in a teaching environment that the SPEAK test does not examine.

The Test of Spoken English (the SPEAK/TSE) is the threshold test used to determine English proficiency in GTAs or faculty suspected of being deficient.

The audit suggests that those conducting interviews have neglected to require all GTAs and faculty potentially lacking English skills to take the SPEAK test.

The audit also said that there is a failure to record interviews with prospective faculty. Recording interviews allows a clearer assessment.

Recording the interviews with faculty members may help, but will most likely retain some of the same problems, Van Domelen said.

A survey conducted in 1999 and presented to the Association for Institutional Research suggested many other causes of teaching problems, leaving English proficiency as one issue among many.

The survey looked at a broad range of teaching skills based upon student responses rather than the conduct used in testing and faculty interviews.

The survey showed that there is a high number of proficient non-native speakers of English who are GTAs, and it concluded that there is a problem with the ability of GTAs to interact with students in class.

The reason for the persistence of these problems is that spoken English improves when used on a one-on-one basis because the speaker being evaluated is able to repeat him or herself, Van Domelen said.

However, as Wood said, practice is the only way that many potential instructors are able to learn.

Wood said that one way for students to overcome the barrier of language in the classroom is to approach the instructor after class. A student doesn't necessarily need to state the problem, but can simply ask the instructor to restate the material under question.

"In many ways, it's not an issue," said Talat Rahman, distinguished professor of physics.

"We all want to be understood."

Advisory board to push for rec center, community programs

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members of the Manhattan Parks and Recreation advisory board will educate area business leaders this weekend about the possibility of constructing an indoor aquatics and recreational facility in the community at the annual Chamber of Commerce leadership retreat.

The group's report will include their findings from a community needs assessment, conducted by a task force last spring, as well as the idea to construct an indoor aquatics and recreation facility in Manhattan, Terry DeWeese, director of Manhattan Parks and Recreation, said.

The assessment came after the Chamber of Commerce released a report last January that listed the top five priorities of Manhattan residents. An indoor aquatics facility was third on the list.

Following the Chamber's report, a 15-member task force was appointed by the city in March to assess quality of life needs in the Manhattan community.

Such needs included an indoor aquatics facility and recreation center that would provide more space for sporting events and enhance community programs.

Lyle Butler, Chamber of Commerce president, said this weekend's event in Overland Park, Kan., will further educate community leaders on what may become an important issue for the community in the coming months.

The request for an indoor facility is nothing new to community leaders or residents.

Manhattan currently has one indoor aquatics facility at the Natatorium on the K-State campus, where they serve K-State students and faculty, Manhattan High students, area club swim teams and some city residents.

"An aquatics center in and of itself, not necessarily combined with another sports venue, has been identified over the last number of years as a priority in the community," said Bruce McMillan, chair of the advisory board and community needs assessment task force.

This request, however, includes community support, something that has been lacking in the past, McMillan and DeWeese said.

"This issue has been reviewed and discussed over the last 15 years, but I think we're seeing additional support from various organizations in the community – not only verbal, but financial as well," McMillan said.

DeWeese said he has seen the same support.

"Community leaders and the Chamber of Commerce are all on the same page this time," he said.

Butler said the Chamber of Commerce has supported the task force's community needs assessment and will continue to work closely with the group as it continues its research this spring.

Results of the group's findings were presented during the summer to city commissioners, and in September, commissioners asked the group to continue their research and to look for grant opportunities, possible partnerships, site investigation and improvements toward permanent residents.

In December, the advisory board recommended City Park as a future site; however, they are looking into Griffith Park and CiCo Park as possibilities.

Now, the advisory board and task force continue putting figures together regarding the cost and size of an indoor aquatics and recreational facility.

DeWeese said he hopes the board will create a finalized package and present a bond issue plan late this year or early next year.

Once the bond issue plan is in place, DeWeese said it would take about four more months to educate the community about the proposal.

"What you're seeing is that people are saying we want this kind of facility in this community," he said.

"Recreation programs are increasing because people want these type of activities.

"We hope to have the facilities to meet the needs of this community."

Did you know?

Manhattan rec center

What's happened: A 15-member parks and recreation task force conducted a community needs assessment for Manhattan. The assessment found residents would like an indoor aquatics and recreation center, as well as a variety of other community programs.

What's going on: The parks and recreation advisory board is making a presentation this weekend to Manhattan business leaders, giving a report on the assessment findings as well as future possibilities of a center.

What will happen: The group will continue to conduct research regarding the future facility in hopes of making an official proposal for a center to city commissioners in the coming year.

Wildcat fans should stay dedicated to men's team

NATHAN RYERSON

K-State was once a thriving basketball community.

The word football was followed by a slight curdling in the stomach, caused by the thought of having to go out and watch the Wildcats play.

Today, times have changed, and despite the mediocrity of this last season, football rules our collegiate lives.

Up until this year, our basketball program had little spark and even less of a fan base.

My fellow students, I believe that times are changing.

Currently, we have the opportunity to put basketball back on the map.

I know change is hard, but believe me, it will be worth it.

I can see the future and it looks bright. The K-State men's basketball team is on its way back.

Currently our Wildcats are 10-3 and look promising.

Don't let the fact that the Wildcats have three losses fool you. They are still a better team.

Two of the losses were in tight games. One was a double overtime loss in Nebraska and the other was a last-second loss to Texas Tech.

At this point last year the Wildcats were 8-5, which is not the type of start basketball fans look for.

Fans like winners, and our student body has problems backing a loser.

After translating the grumbling heard on campus this year, you would have thought our football team hadn't won a game.

But so far, the men's basketball team is off to a great start, and has a promising chance at making the postseason, whether it be the NCAA Tournament or an NIT bid.

I would be happy with either, because in my mind, it's a start. A start that would take us down the path of tradition and show us the way to success.

I have had my doubts of Jim Wooldridge's coaching ability, but I believe I didn't give him a fair chance.

These last two years, he has shown us his ability to recruit.

Last year he brought in the Big 12 Newcomer of the Year, Jeremiah Massey.

This year, we are seeing a starting line up that contains one freshman, two sophomores, a junior and a senior.

They have skill and show good chemistry, which comes from good coaching.

This team is only going to get better through experience and another year of good recruiting.

Currently, our Wildcats are averaging 73 points per game while allowing only 65.2 points per game. Last year, K-State only averaged 69.4 points per game while allowing 65.5 points per game.

Say what you want, but this team is much improved.

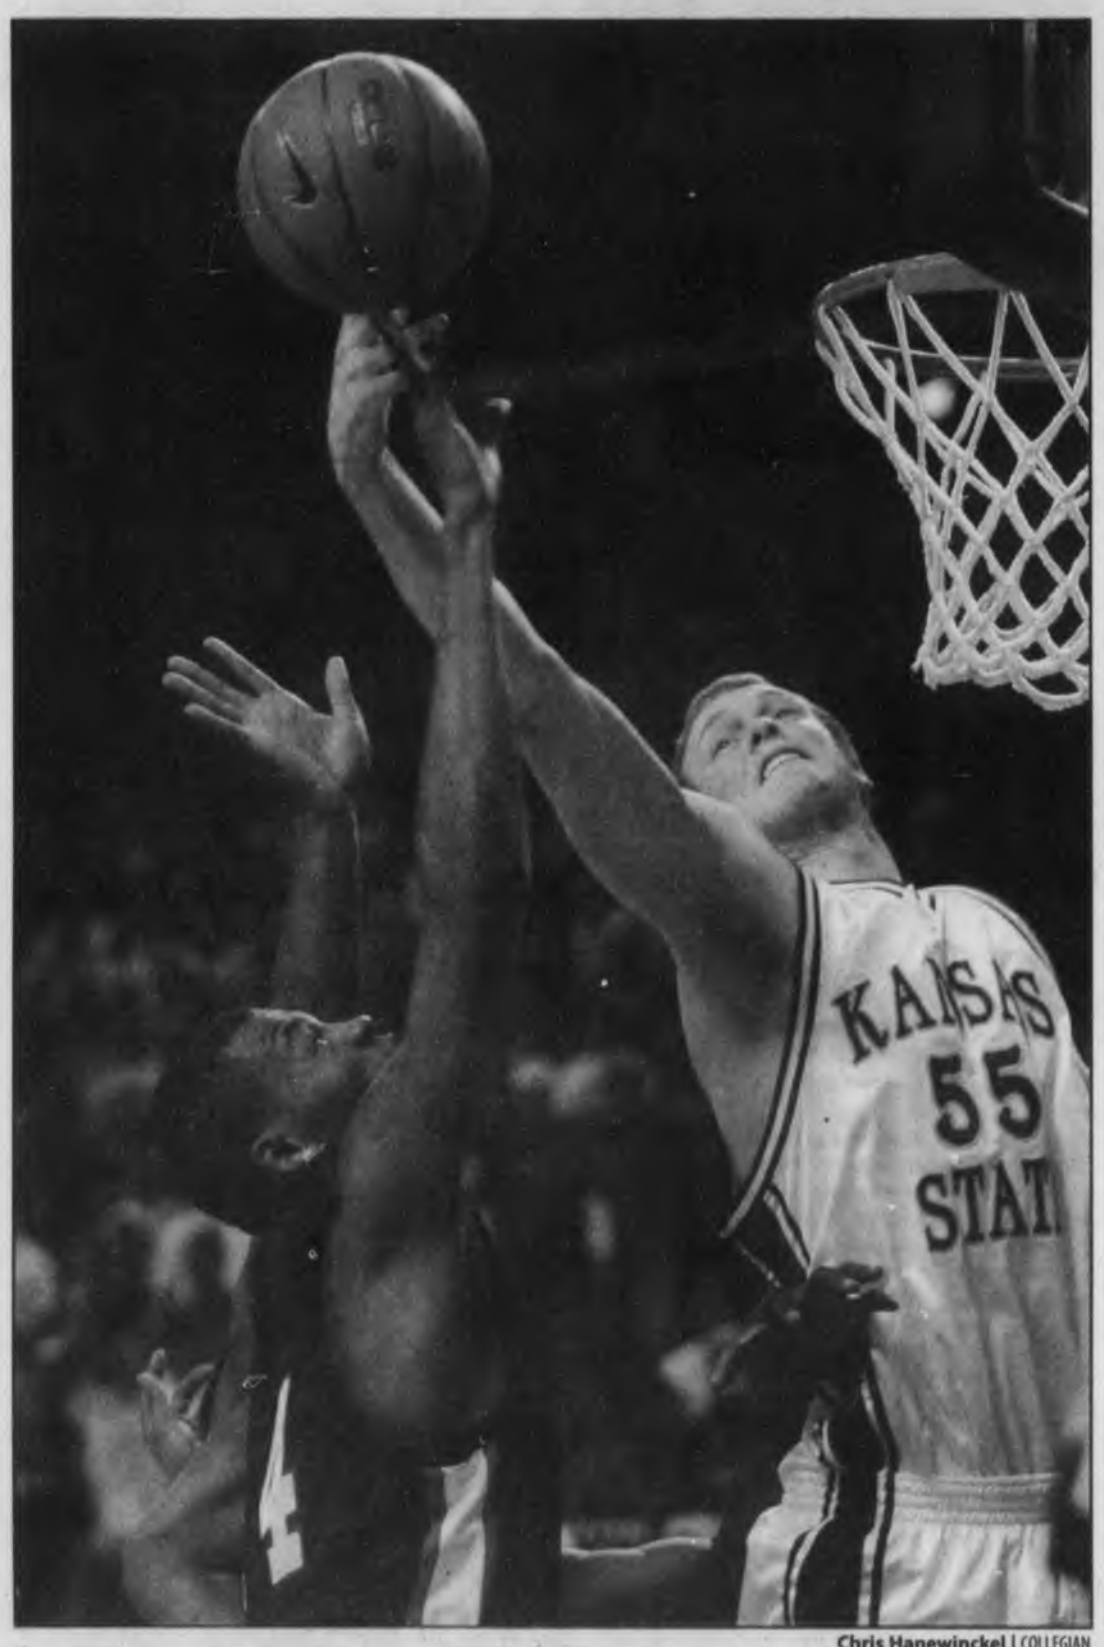
Go see for yourself. Don't let the loss to Texas Tech dampen your enthusiasm for this team.

Actually use your tickets this year. Basketball is an exciting sport. Trust me.

This team has a chance to get K-State back on the map in the college basketball world.

So students, keep supporting our men's basketball team. I know you know where they play because I've seen you at the K-State women's games.

I promise that our K-State men will make it to postseason play, whether it be the NIT or the "Big Dance".



The loss to Texas Tech hurts, but I guarantee you will see them knock off some top 25 teams along the way.

Those of you who know me know that it pains me to say this, but this may even be the year you get to see the Jayhawks lose in Bramlage.

I'd cry myself to sleep, but it just may happen.

Heartbreak again

Wildcats lose on 3-pointer in final seconds

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the second straight game, the K-State Wildcats gave their Big 12 Conference opponent all it could handle.

And for the second straight game, it was not enough.

Texas Tech senior forward Curtis Marshall hit a 3-pointer with two seconds remaining, and freshman guard Clent Stewart's own desperation three-point attempt with time expiring was too long, as the Red Raiders beat the Wildcats 79-76 Wednesday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

Four days after falling in double overtime at Nebraska, K-State (10-3, 0-2) suffered another setback despite 15 points apiece from senior forward Jeremiah Massey and sophomore guard Fred Peete.

"We're real frustrated," sophomore center Tyler Hughes said. "We took that nasty loss to Nebraska that we could have won if we would have just made some free throws, and tonight there wasn't much we could do about it. They just hit a couple shots, got themselves into the game and got the 'W.'"

The Wildcats, with season highs in 3-pointers (13-of-19) and field goal percentage (58 percent), were statistically superior to the Red Raiders. But Texas Tech (9-4, 1-1) was almost as good, shooting 50 percent from the field and matching K-State with five players in double figures.

"We just didn't get enough stops on the defensive end," Massey said. "Those guys made baskets all game. We didn't have any stops. We just played terrible on the defensive end."

The Wildcats led by as many as 10 in the first half, but Texas Tech senior guard Ronald Ross' 18 first-half points kept the Red Raiders in it.

Wildcat rebounding woes, turnovers and fouls did not help the team's cause.

K-State had a season-high 19 turnovers and allowed Texas Tech to grab numerous offensive rebounds. The Red Raiders also hit 11-of-13 free throws in the second half to the Wildcats' 2-of-2.

"Obviously, the difference in the game tonight was the turnovers and rebounding," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "We gave too many points away off the turnovers to win the game. And we gave up 13 offensive boards. So those two stats and the fouls were a problem in the second half as well."

Going into the game, many of the 8,328 in attendance might have expected Texas Tech to be the team with the sloppy play, as the Red Raiders' were tardy to Bramlage due to travel difficulties. The game started 13 minutes late because of the problems.

"It was a tough day for us, but it ended pretty good," Texas Tech coach Bob Knight said.

The Wildcats' failed to cash in not only on the performances of Massey and Peete – who was 5-of-5 from behind the arc – but also 14 points from sophomore forward Cartier Martin and 10 apiece from Hughes and sophomore guard Lance Harris off the bench.

Now, the Wildcats will look for their first conference victory of the season against Missouri on Saturday at home and try to shake off another conference loss.

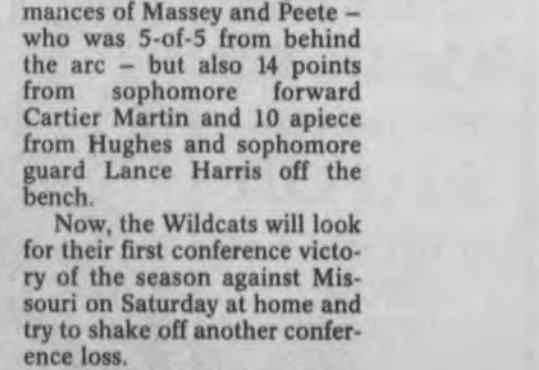
"We talk all the time that in the league, you're going to be in a lot of games like this," Wooldridge said. "They're tough to come away on the other side of the ledger."

Cats shoot season high from beyond arc

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The long-range shot had not been an impressive statistical category for the K-State Wildcats – until Wednesday.

The Wildcats (10-3, 0-2) came into their first home Big 12 Conference game against Texas Tech (9-4, 1-1) shooting just 40 percent from beyond the three-point arc through 12 games this season.



Against the Red Raiders, K-State shot a blistering 68.4 percent as a team from three-point range. Sophomore guards Cartier Martin and Fred Peete triggered the hot shooting with two three-pointers in the first five minutes of the game.

In the first half, the Wildcats shot 77.8 percent as a team with Martin and Peete combining for 5-of-5 shooting from deep. Peete even missed almost four minutes of the first half with an injury before coming back in to hit two straight three-point shots to give K-State a 34-25 lead with six minutes left in the first half.

The Wildcats ended the half with four of their last five field goals coming on three-pointers to lead Texas Tech 42-38 at the break.

Sophomore forward Tyler Hughes said he was astounded by his teammates' long-distance shooting.

CFB | SEC football coaches favor adopting instant replay

Eleven of the league's coaches heard from commissioner Mike Slive on Tuesday at the American Football Coaches Association annual convention.

Slive

Other conferences, including the ACC, have discussed replay. The Big Ten used limited replays this season.

SEC athletic directors will consider in March whether to adopt a replay system.

Among the issues to be settled, according to the paper are the cost of cameras and crews for non-televised games and who will be able to call for replays.

CBB | Florida staff assistant pleads not guilty

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Florida basketball staff assistant Major Parker pleaded not guilty Tuesday to five counts of cocaine distribution.

Parker and a co-defendant were indicted on drug charges last week by a federal grand jury in Tallahassee. The 26-year-old former Gators forward was charged with four counts of distributing cocaine and one count of conspiracy to distribute and possession with intent to distribute more than 500 grams of cocaine.

If convicted, he faces a maximum of 40 years in prison, plus four years of probation and up to $2 million in fines. The university suspended Parker indefinitely after his arrest.

NHL | 2005-06 hockey season could be canceled

There will be no hockey this season, and arenas could remain dark next year, too.

So says Carolina Hurricanes owner Peter Karmanos Jr.

Karmanos Jr.

"My gut feeling is that this season is gone," said Karmanos in an interview published in the Toronto Sun.

He held out the threat that without cost certainty, the owners could also cancel the 2005-06 season.

The comments came despite commissioner Gary Bettman's call for silence on the lockout, although sources told the paper that he might have been talking on league instructions.

Boxing | Don King files lawsuit against ESPN

NEW YORK — Boxing promoter Don King filed a defamation suit Wednesday claiming he was portrayed in a false light in an ESPN SportsCentury segment aired last May, and his attorney said King is entitled to damages of more than $2.5 billion.

The lawsuit says the program accused King of being "a snake oil salesman, a shameless huckster and worse," claimed the flamboyant promoter underpaid Muhammad Ali by $1.2 million and claimed King -- convicted in a 1967 beating death and acquitted in another killing in 1954 -- "killed not once, but twice."

The former NBA All-Star, who faces reckless manslaughter charges Related to a 2002 shooting at his New Jersey mansion, has said he hopes to use the CBA as a springboard for his return to the NBA.

Williams, who turns 37 next month, quit professional basketball in 2000 because of knee problems.

The guidebook to birth control

What you need to know: how it works, effectiveness, disadvantages

The pill

The patch

Depo-provera

The condom

NuvaRing

By Addie Laue
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Forty-nine percent of pregnancies in the United States each year are unintended.

With statistics like that, young people need to take their birth control options seriously, said Donna Potter, LPN.

"Young women, especially college women, have set specific goals for themselves," said Potter. "They want to develop their careers and find the right partner before they have children, and that is why it is important that they understand their options."

THE PILL

The pill is one of the most widely used methods of birth control. It works by releasing hormones to prevent ovulation. It is most effective when taken every day at the same time.

Advantages: If taken correctly, the pill is nearly 100 percent effective. It also helps regulate periods and relieve cramps.

Disadvantages: Blood clotting is a serious side effect, and it is more common in women who smoke while on the pill. This is rare, however.

Less serious side effects can include slight weight gain, nausea, mood swings and headaches.

THE ORTHO EVRA PATCH

The Ortho Evra Patch works in the same way as the pill by releasing hormones to prevent ovulation.

It is simply a sticky patch that can be placed anywhere on the upper or lower back, abdomen or buttocks. It should be replaced weekly on the same day.

"It is one of the newest forms of birth control," said Dr. Steve Priddle of the Women's Health Group.

"A lot of women ask to try it, but few stay with it because they have problems with application site irritation."

Advantages: Women who use the patch don't have to remember to take a daily pill. When used correctly, the patch is 99 percent effective – nearly as effective as the pill.

Disadvantages: Some women who use the patch experience headaches, application site irritation, nausea, upper respiratory infection and cramps.

Because it uses the same hormones as the pill, blood clots are also a rare risk of using the patch.

DEPO-PROVERA

Depo-Provera is a shot taken once every three months. It works by using hormones to prevent ovulation.

"Depo-Provera often causes women to stop having their period altogether," said Debby Carroll, Riley County Health Department nurse.

"Some women really like this, and other don't because they're always worried that they're pregnant."

Advantages: Women who use Depo-Provera don't have to remember to take a daily pill, they only have to remember to schedule their shots four times a year. It is 99.7 percent effective when shots are taken on time.

Disadvantages: Two-thirds of women in studies with Depo-Provera experienced a weight gain of about five pounds in the first year of use. It has also been associated with increasing the risk of developing thinner bones.

THE NUVARING

The NuvaRing is a small, flexible ring that is inserted into the vagina.

It works by releasing low doses of hormones.

Advantages: The NuvaRing is 99 percent effective when used correctly. It only has to be replaced once a month.

It uses very low doses of hormones, so women who use it experience very few emotional ups and downs which are sometimes associated with hormonal methods of birth control.

Disadvantages: There are very few side effects with the NuvaRing, but they may include headaches, nausea and breakthrough bleeding.

THE MALE CONDOM

This is one of the most common methods of birth control. It works by preventing sperm from entering the vagina.

"The condom is probably the second most popular form of birth control, after the pill," Priddle said.

"People like them because they can get them without having to see a doctor, and they're cheap."

Advantages: Condoms don't require a prescription like most hormonal methods of birth control, so they are easy to get.

They are also one of the cheapest forms of birth control and they are one of the only methods that prevent the spread of STDs.

Disadvantages: Condoms may break, especially if they aren't used correctly. They also slightly dull sensation.

"As the risks of STDs increase," Priddle said, "it is important for young people to understand that they can use condoms with other forms of birth control so the benefits are two-fold."

Finding potential dates requires going after what you want

As yet another semester begins, most students are presented with a slew of potential dates. But for some, the opposite occurs, and they aren't presented with any new options at all.

LACEY STORER

These students enter the semester facing a possibly bleak period in their dating lives. They just may find themselves falling into a dating rut.

You would think that with almost 25,000 students on campus, finding someone to date would be as easy as finding a drunken person in Aggieville.

Unfortunately, this isn't always the case.

Whether you've been looking for a little while, or you can't remember the last time you had somebody, here are a few tips on how to get out of that dating rut.

1. Get out of the house – It seems like common sense that you can't meet anyone if you sit at home every night, but that's the bad part of a dating rut.

It drains all your desire to go out and meet new people. It makes you tired of playing the game and eager to do nothing more than sit at home and watch endless hours of TV.

That's when you need to suck it up and peel yourself off the couch.

You don't need to have a wild, late night; even an hour or two bowling at the K-State Student Union could give you enough exposure to meet someone new, which leads to my second tip...

2. Keep your eyes peeled at all times – When you're going about your day, it can be easy to get lost in your own little world. You're thinking about class, work, eating, whatever.

Start opening your eyes and paying attention to what is going on around you.

Try making small talk with the hot girl sitting next to you in the computer lab or the cute guy at the end of your table in the library.

You never know when that random person you start chatting with in line for Taco Bell could end up being something more than random.

3. Hang out with some new friends – I don't mean people you've just met, but friends who are outside your usual weekend crowd.

Varying the people you hang out with can expose you to a whole network of people you never knew existed.

This was one benefit I had when I moved in with girls I knew, but never really hung out with before.

I got to meet all their friends, including some cute guys. Even though none of them turned out to be boyfriend material, it was enough to make me feel like my dating life wasn't completely dull.

So accept the invitation from that coworker, sorority sister or guy down the hall you don't know very well. Who knows what hotties you could meet?

4. Stop looking – OK, I know this contradicts what I said before, but hear me out.

It's practically one of Murphy's laws that as soon as you stop looking for love, you find it.

It's not giving up, it's just relaxing about the whole situation and letting fate take its course.

One of the pitfalls of actively looking for someone to date is that you can become obsessed with always being on the lookout, which can lead you to go out all the time and never have any fun because you are more worried about meeting someone than about having a good time.

Keep going out and looking around you, but relax and enjoy yourself.

There's nothing more attractive than someone who appears relaxed and confident and is having a good time.

You never know when a casual night out with your roommates for pitchers at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque could lead to exchanging phone numbers with the hot guy sitting in the booth across from you, who actually calls you the next day.

And before you know it, your dating rut is over.

Insurgents attack as election nears

U.S. soldier killed in Mosul; suspects detained in governor's murder

By Jason Keyser

Insurgents launched a string of attacks in the northern city of Mosul as part of their escalating campaign of violence before the Jan. 30 elections, killing two Iraqi National Guardsmen and wounding two others in a car bombing Wednesday, a day after another ambush killed three Iraqis, the U.S. military said.

A U.S. soldier assigned to the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force was killed in action in the volatile western Anbar province, the military said Wednesday. The unit is based at Camp Fallujah west of Baghdad.

In Baghdad, U.S. forces detained six suspects in the slaying of the provincial governor of the area around the Iraqi capital, the military said Wednesday. Troops detained the suspects in an early-morning raid on a house in Baghdad's northern Hurriyah neighborhood Tuesday.

Gunmen opened fire on Ali al-Haidari's three-vehicle convoy Jan. 4 in the neighborhood, killing the governor and six bodyguards.

Two of those detained were directly involved in the slaying, said Brig. Gen. Jeffery Hammond, assistant commander of the 1st Cavalry Division, which controls Baghdad.

Iraq's insurgents have repeatedly targeted government officials around the country, saying they are allies of the U.S.-led coalition.

On Tuesday, insurgents in Mosul hit a convoy of American and Iraqi forces by detonating a roadside bomb and firing from a mosque, killing three National Guardsmen.

The troops were bringing heaters and other supplies to a school when they were attacked, a military statement said. The convoy was hit first with a roadside bomb and then sprayed with gunfire from a nearby mosque. No Americans were reported hurt.

In a separate clash, insurgents fired on a U.S. patrol in southern Mosul, sparking a battle that killed one attacker and injured another.

In the city of Baqoubah, northeast of Baghdad, gunmen shot dead Jawad Ibrahim, an assistant to the mayor, as he was fixing his car in an industrial neighborhood, police said.

A top U.S. lawmaker visiting the Afghan capital Wednesday told reporters he hoped Iraq's election would mirror the recent vote in Afghanistan in helping to stop militants and smooth the road to democracy.

"Our hope is that we will see something very similar ... (which will) squelch, or overcome and overpower insurgencies and challenges to democracy, in a way that will far surpass people's anticipations," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn.

On Tuesday, Prime Minister Ayad Allawi acknowledged that parts of Iraq probably will not be safe enough for people to vote, and he said he plans to boost the size of the country's army from 100,000 to 150,000 men by year's end.

Allawi discussed preparations for this month's election by telephone with President Bush on Tuesday, and both leaders underscored the importance of going ahead with the vote.

White House declares weapons search over

By Katherine Pfleger Shrader
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – The White House acknowledged Wednesday that its hunt for Iraqi weapons of mass destruction – a two-year search costing millions of dollars – has closed down without finding the stockpiles that President Bush cited as a justification for overthrowing Saddam Hussein.

Bush's spokesman said the president had no regrets about invading Iraq.

"Based on what we know today, the president would have taken the same action because this is about protecting the American people," said Press Secretary Scott McClellan.

The Iraq Survey Group – made up of as many as 1,500 military and intelligence specialists and support staff – is ending its search of military installations, factories and laboratories where it was thought that equipment and products might be converted to making weapons.

McClellan said the active search had virtually ended. "There may be a couple, a few people that are focused on that," he said, adding that they would handle any future reports that might come in.

At a meeting last month, McClellan said Bush thanked the chief U.S. weapons inspector, Charles Duelfer, for his work. A special adviser to the CIA director, Duelfer will deliver a final edition of a report on Iraq's weapons next month.

McClellan said it is not expected to fundamentally differ from the findings of a report last fall.

Duelfer said then that Iraq had no weapons of mass destruction and had not made any since 1991.

However, he said the government harbored intentions of recreating its weapons programs and had gone to great lengths to manipulate the U.N. oil-for-food program.

In an interview Wednesday with Barbara Walters of ABC News, Bush defended his decision to invade Iraq.

"I felt like we'd find weapons of mass destruction _ like many here in the United States, many around the world," Bush said in the interview, to be broadcast Friday night.

"We need to find out what went wrong in the intelligence gathering. ... Saddam was dangerous and the world is safer without him in power."

In a statement, House Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi of California said Bush "needs to explain to the American people why he was so wrong, for so long, about the reasons for war."

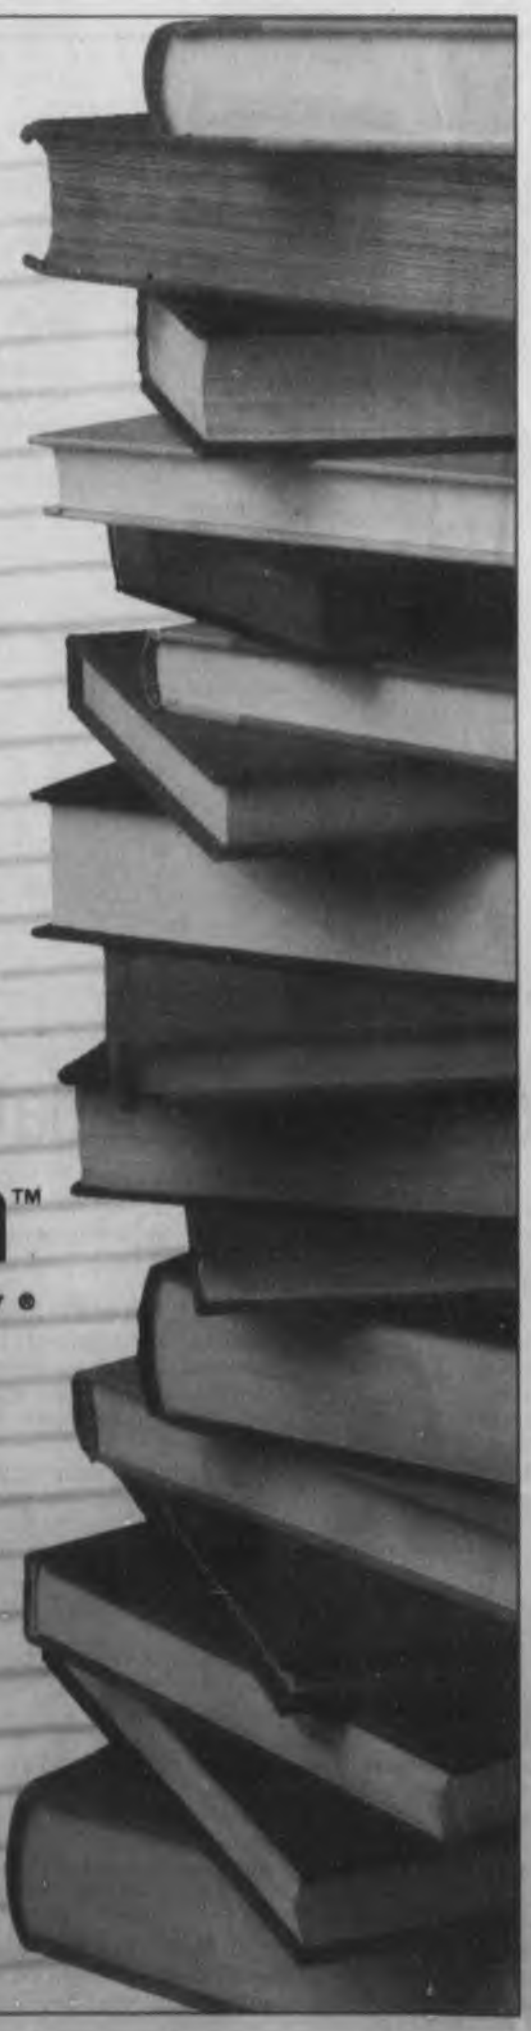
The end of the weapons hunt comes as the Bush administration struggles with a dangerous security situation in Iraq leading up to Jan. 30 elections.

Meanwhile, other countries – notably Iran and North Korea – are suspected of developing covert nuclear weapons programs.

When asked whether the failure to find weapons of mass destruction in Iraq would damage U.S. credibility in handling future threats, McClellan said the president would continue to work with the international community, particularly on diplomatic solutions.

He said pre-emptive military action was "the last option" to pursue.

"We are acting to make sure we have the best possible intelligence," McClellan said, adding that a number of changes have been made since the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.



Almost one year ago, Bush formed a presidential commission to investigate U.S. intelligence capabilities on weapons of mass destruction, focusing not only on Iraq but on how well the intelligence community understands the threat from other countries and terror networks.

Its report is due March 31.

Supreme Court gives life sentence to Kansas City man for rape charge

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A convict whose appearances before the high courts of Kansas and the United States prompted his removal from a sexual predator program was sentenced to life in prison for raping a woman about a year after his release.

Michael Crane – convicted in October of forcible rape, kidnapping, third-degree assault and three counts of forcible sodomy – was handed a sentence of life plus 131 years on Tuesday for the March 22, 2003, attack.

"Society can't risk Michael Crane having another bad day," said assistant prosecutor Ted Hunt. "It made that risk before and the gamble has been lost."

Court records show Crane, now 43, began committing petty crimes and exposing himself to women at the age of 16.

Crane was convicted in 1994 in Johnson County for a 1993 attack on a Leawood, Kan., video store clerk.

He was sentenced to 35 years to life on convictions for kidnapping, attempted rape and attempted sodomy.

The Kansas Supreme Court overturned the conviction on technical grounds in 1996.

The following year, Crane pleaded guilty to the reduced charge of aggravated sexual battery and was sentenced to three to 10 years in prison.

As he was approaching release, the state sought to have him kept in confinement, and a jury determined him to be a violent sexual predator.

The Kansas Supreme Court overturned that finding, but Crane remained confined while the state appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The Kansas court had said the state would have to show that inmates totally lacked control of their behavior, but the U.S. court ruling said it was enough to prove "serious difficulty in controlling behavior."

Three days after that ruling, Crane was given conditional release from the predator program.

That meant he was free, but he had to continue to see a therapist.

Crane's attorney, Patrick Peters, said courts decided years ago that the defendant wasn't a sexually violent predator.

"His history has not been one of violence," Peters said, adding that Crane should be sentenced accordingly.

Wichita residents pray for BTK arrest

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A man whose arrest on minor charges sparked speculation of a possible link to the BTK serial killings claims his home was illegally searched by police.

A BTK-related tip last month pointed authorities to Roger Valadez, 64. After police discovered Valadez had outstanding warrants for trespassing and housing violations, his home was searched. Three days later, police said they had excluded Valadez from the BTK investigation.

"I don't think you can lawfully kick down a citizen's door to execute a warrant for a mouth swab for DNA the day you get the warrant," said Dan Monnat, Valadez's lawyer. "There's no emergency. The DNA is not going to disappear."

After Valadez's arrest Dec. 1, he was taken to jail on misdemeanor warrants, but he was not shown a search warrant that night, Monnat said.

Another lawyer for Valadez, Craig Shultz, said his client was considering suing the city.

Wichita Police Chief Norman Williams said people who believe their Fourth Amendment right was violated have the right to bring the issue to court.

"This is a very complex, intense investigation," he said of the decades-old search for BTK. But "we do not allow ourselves to get caught up in an investigation to the point that we are not mindful of what is expected – which is to work within that Constitution."

The killer – who coined his own nickname – is linked to eight unsolved homicides that terrorized Wichita, the first in 1974. BTK stands for "Bind, Torture, Kill."

Last year, The Wichita Eagle received a letter with information on an unsolved 1986 killing. It was the first communication from the killer in more than two decades, and police said it linked the serial killer to an eighth slaying.

The other seven victims died in the 1970s, with BTK claiming responsibility in letters to the newspaper and a television station.

On Tuesday, more than 100 people gathered to pray for the capture of the suspect.

"We are asking BTK to surrender and do the right thing," said the Rev. Terry Fox, pastor of Immanuel Baptist Church, where the service took place. "We want to stop the senseless killing."

The Rev. Pat Bullock, director of missions for the Heart of Kansas Southern Baptist Association, said it was important for Christians to come together and pray about the killer.

"God can hear us as we pray. He can do great things," Bullock said.

RESTAURANTS | Customers enjoy culture, traditions

The Hibachi Hut menu primarily consists of Creole and Cajun-inspired food, including red beans and rice, gumbo and jambalaya.

A Hut favorite, though, is the Chicken Orleans, with marinated chicken breast and homemade andouille sausage tossed in a Creole cream sauce.

Texas Star's menu features Tex-Mex style food as well as barbecue brisket, ribs and chicken fried steak.

Both restaurants focus on making every menu item from scratch, with one exception – the Dorothy Lynch dressing, Kale Becker said.

The restaurants also follow the laid-back philosophy, much different from their neighbors on the block.

"We have Rusty's and Kite's with the loud scene, and then Auntie Mae's with an even mix of music," Jared Becker said. "And then there's us.

"We're for people who want to get away from the bar scene and don't want to fight for a place to sit."

Josh Collinsworth, bartender, said he agreed and also said Texas Star and Hibachi Hut don't follow the typical suit of other Aggieville bars and restaurants.

"The one thing we're trying to be is a restaurant rather than a bar with food," Collinsworth said. "It's a place with a lot of tradition, and that sets us apart."

Add in the family-owned atmosphere, and the locals would not have it any other way.

Karen Westover, Junction City resident, said she occasionally visited Texas Star over the years but didn't become a regular until last summer, when the Becker family took over the business.

Originally from Texas, Westover said the restaurant has won over her approval of Mexican food, causing her to eat there several times a week.

"I almost always come Sundays after church," Westover said, adding that she tries to order a different entree each time.

"It's the best Mexican food outside the state of Texas."

UNION | Food Court features new Wildcat Grill

they have more independence in what they serve. Some of the food choices on the menu include a carb-friendly burger wrapped in lettuce, a $.99 "8-1" small hamburger, chicken wings, a chicken strip basket and a chicken fritter sandwich.

Griffin said All Star Players' Wildcat Grill will be bringing back Greek food to the Food Court. They will have traditional gyros sandwiches, roasted veggie wraps, Greek salads, pitas and baklava, a Greek dessert.

There also will be special menu items that will rotate on a weekly basis, such as fried mushrooms with ranch dip.

Anna Ketchum, sophomore in French and pre-law, said she never ate at Mean Gene's Burgers but that she might eat at All Star Players Wildcat Grill.

"It'll be nice to have an original option when I come to eat at the Union," Ketchum said.

Despite the new menu items and increased options, students shouldn't see an increase in prices at All Star Players' Wildcat Grill.

"There's no franchise fees or product up-charge involved with this new concept," said Griffin. With Mean Gene's Burgers, the Union had to pay franchise fees.

General Nutrition Center's smoothie kiosk will be set up with blenders and will make high-energy smoothies as they are ordered. The hours will depend on the demand, but they are hoping to open at 7 a.m. and stay open throughout the day.

"I think that's an excellent idea," said Ketchum. "It's hard to find healthy options when you're a college student."

Another change made in the Union was Market Carvery switching locations with Origins. Market Carvery moved to the front, and Origins moved to the back wall. Both restaurants will continue to serve the same food as before.

Connaughton said the Union was not able to make as many changes between semesters as they have before because this year's break was shorter. He said the changes the Union made were smaller, but they hope students will like what was done.

"We have that flexibility to do different things and respond to what students want to see," he said.

BASKETBALL | Wildcats lose in final seconds

"Everybody was hitting tonight, it was just a three-ball fest," Hughes said.

The second half was more of the same from the sophomore guards as Martin connected on 2-of-3 3-pointers and Peete hit a perfect 2-for-2 on 3-point shots.

Coach Jim Wooldridge said most of the team's 19 3-point attempts were good looks.

"We shot it awfully well," Wooldridge said. "I think they weren't outside of what we are trying to accomplish."

Both K-State's 3-point shooting percentage and 13 3-point makes were season highs.

Despite the hot shooting, the Wildcats lost their second consecutive Big 12 game 79-76, but senior forward Jeremiah Massey said the loss is all that matters to him.

"They probably shot it just as well as we did," Massey said. "It doesn't matter how close it was. We let the game slip away once again."

Kansas Senate adopts same-sex marriage ban

By John Hanna
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Senators adopted a proposed amendment to the Kansas Constitution on Thursday that bans same-sex marriage and prevents the state from allowing civil unions or granting other legal recognition to gay relationships.

The measure declares that only couples in a union of one man and one woman would be entitled to benefits normally associated with marriage.

The 28-11 vote sent the measure to the House. Supporters had one vote more than the two-thirds majority necessary for adoption in the 40-member chamber, and they're hoping for a statewide vote April 5.

Backers of the amendment said it would protect the traditional definition of marriage – already defined in state statute – from legal challenges. They also said such unions form strong families and are vital to society.

"Can we be sure that no activist judges or officials exist in Kansas?" said Sen. Dennis Wilson, R-Overland Park, who voted for the measure. "An amendment to our constitution is the only way to protect the sacred institution."

Critics consider the proposed amendment discriminatory.

"Never before in the history of our state have we added an amendment to the constitution that proactively discriminates against people," said Sen. John Vratil, R-Leawood, an opponent of the measure. "The people we're discriminating against are not a threat to my marriage or your marriage. They're not a threat to our children."

The proposed amendment mirrors one the Senate approved, but the House rejected last year. Last year, voters in 13 other states, including Missouri, amended their constitutions to ban gay marriage.

Kansas senators voted 28-11 against a proposal to narrow their measure so that it mirrored the existing Kansas law.

Such a change would have made it possible for the state to allow civil unions or grant other benefits to unmarried couples.

The Senate moved with unusual speed to consider the measure. Republican leaders scheduled the vote on the fourth day of the legislative session, without having public hearings or a committee review. Debate lasted less than an hour.

The House will have to adopt the measure by Feb. 11 for it to appear on the ballot in April when Kansas holds city and school board elections. Voters' approval by a simple majority would add the amendment to the state constitution.

Key House Republican leaders were not sure how quickly their chamber would act.

Driving for college success

Buying a license plate can help send a K-State student thorough school.

The K-State Alumni Association sells license plates to generate funds for the university's general scholarships through the Educational Institutional License Plate Program.

"We didn't want to just raise funds that the university would use," Brad Sidener, vice president for finance and administration for the Alumni Association, said. "We wanted to raise scholarship money."

Sidener said the idea originated in 1997 from similar programs in other states. K-State, Wichita State University and the University of Kansas got together to come up with a program to raise money. They worked with respective local representatives and a bill was passed in 1997.

In order for the program to become effective, at least 500 license plates had to be sold and of the three universities, K-State was the first to do so.

Although the license plates are sold through the Alumni Association, the sale is not limited just to alumni. Anyone can purchase one of the license plates which are white with a purple Powercat on them.

To buy a K-State Educational License Plate, a one-time fee of $48.50 is paid. After that, $50 is paid to the Alumni Association, of which $45 goes directly to the general scholarship fund, Sidener said. The remaining $5 goes toward various fees. Another $50 is paid every year the license plate is renewed, and it is also tax deductible.

"Currently we have about 2300 plates that are active, and that grows every year," Sidener said.

Since 1997, almost $612,000 has been raised for K-State's general scholarship fund. Sidener said they expect to make $104,000 from the license plates in 2005.

Since the program originated, Pittsburg State University, Fort Hays State University and Washburn University have begun to sell the plates, Riley County Treasurer Eileen King said. However, K-State has sold more than any of the other schools.

"The last I knew, K-State was still the leading school," King said.

Diane James, senior administrative specialist of alumni relations at Pittsburg State, said there are 883 educational li-

Sen. Roberts visits K-State's grain marketing research center

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Grain science and industry influenced a visit from Sen. Pat Roberts on Thursday.

Namely, the importance of the research building at K-State.

The building, the Grain Marketing and Production Research Center, 1515 College Ave., is currently undergoing a multi-million dollar renovating process. It is the U.S. Department of Agriculture's main research facility.

With Roberts' leadership, the GMPRC was granted permission in 1995 to go ahead with renovations. Ten years and $14.8 million later, the GMPRC is currently in phase three of the four-phase renovation process.

"This is not only one of the most important grain research facilities in Kansas and the U.S., but also the world," Roberts said.

The renovations, Roberts said, will be a financially worthwhile cause, saving the research center millions of dollars with improved technology. For example, with the research center's increased ability to reduce soil erosion, $300 million will be saved annually, he said.

Worn out equipment, dissolving pipes and a leaky roof were a few of the main physical problems with the research center.

"It may be a $14.8 million investment, but you'll definitely get your money's worth," Roberts said.

Students move into Jardine apartments after residence hall closes

By Annie M. Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lacey Carlson and Ginger Dennis traded life in the residence halls for Jardine Apartments.

Carlson, freshman in finance, and Dennis, freshman in open option, were among 50 students who chose Jardine over another residence halls when Haymaker Hall was closed for renovations.

Students were given the choice of either living in Jardine, another residence hall or living off campus and breaking contract without penalty, Associate Director of Administrative Services Bob Burgess said.

Renovations started in Haymaker during break to create suites.

"We are only going to renovate half of the building," Burgess said. "That way we can have the right mix of suite versus standard rooms."

The hall is being renovated during the spring semester because the occupancy is lower than in the fall, he said.

"Starting now gives us the ability to have the rooms available in the fall," he said. "We want to use a time when the occupancy is lower due to graduations and related reasons."

Assistant Director Derek Jackson said students knew even before moving in that they were going to be relocated.

"They had the ability to get out of the contract," he said. "And we have been working closely with them to make the transition easier."

The students received a letter saying they would be living in a temporary place, Tanya Massey, residence life coordinator said.

Carlson and Dennis said choosing to move to Jardine was not a difficult decision.

"We didn't know if living in Jardine would cost more money," Carlson said. "But after looking at all the perks we decided to move in."

Those perks included a parking pass, a meal plan, a kitchen and a private bathroom.

Dennis said her favorite part of living in an apartment is the feel of an independent life.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Ginger Dennis (left), freshman in open option, and her roommate Lacey Carlson, freshman in finance, watch TV in the living room of their Jardine apartment Thursday afternoon. Dennis and Carlson were part of a group of students who were asked to move out of Haymaker Hall because of renovations. The construction, which will create a suite arrangement, will be completed in time for the fall semester.

"Here, we are more on our own," she said "Our RA is more of an aid and not as involved in our lives."

Although there are four girls living in the two bedroom apartment, Carlson said living with more than one other person has not brought any more conflicts.

"Being in the dorms first really helped us become friends," she said. "But we aren't best friends so living together doesn't hurt our relationship."

Dennis said she is a fan of living in the residence halls because it helped introduce her to people she never would have met.

"One plus of living in the dorms is that you make friends," she said. "If you live off campus, you aren't forced to hang out with people."

Burgess said that they plan to have Haymaker Hall open by August.

Massey said the entire staff worked hard to make the transition an easy one for the students.

Students were given $100 off their spring contract if they moved out of their rooms before winter break, she said.

"For those who couldn't do that, we had them inventory their things and we supplied them with boxes," she said. "The construction crew moved all the boxes to a temporary storage ."

Jackson said the construction is a positive move for the students, and he hasn't heard negative feedback.

"I think the students will be excited when they move into the new suites in the fall," he said. "We are meeting the demands of the students for privacy."

Dennis said she appreciates the luxury of a private bathroom, even though it doesn't come equipped with a personal maid.

"The only downside is having to clean the bathroom," she said. "We don't have Miss Betty anymore to do it for us."

Carlson said she enjoys apartment life so much she is going to miss it.

"I plan on going back to the dorms," she said. "But I don't think I will like it as much."

Adidas sponsors race

Participants have chance for prizes

Treadmills will be set up to time half-miles in Finish Line in the Manhattan Town Center this weekend.

Adidas is hosting the half-mile run with Finish Line, said Nathan Michel, Adidas public relations.

Free T-shirts and other prizes will be given out by Adidas to participants, he said.

There is no fee to run, but donations will be appreciated and accepted on the behalf of the Manhattan Boys and Girls Club, Michel said.

Adidas has done promotions before, but this is their first one in the area inside an actual store, he said.

"We expect a big turn out with our publicity push lately. We hope to get a lot of students and residents there for charity purposes," he said.

After all participants have ran and been timed for their half-mile run, the fastest male and female runner from each day will receive a gift certificate to Finish Line.

The run is to promote Adidas' newly designed athletic shoe, the Megaride, Michel said. By trying on the Megaride, people can receive free giveaways, and prizes including T-shirts, bracelets and other various products.

"Adidas is really trying to target the K-State student body, but anyone is welcome," Michel said.

Casey Kelley of the Manhattan Boys and Girls Club said the club will appreciate the donations.

"This sounds like a fun and great promotion, and we're very thankful to be receiving the donation," she said. "The money will go to our general programming for the club."

TO THE POINT

Americans must continue work to live out King's dream

While students sit back and enjoy their holiday Monday, they should take time to remember the man the day behind it.

Martin Luther King Jr. was a civil rights leader who made an impact on history. His work to promote equality was courageous and heroic in a time of turmoil.

He will forever be remembered as a leader because he triumphed and overcame obstacles during a time when the idea of equality was not always popular.

Today, Americans can see that equality is the only way because "all men are created equal."

It is essential that each person realizes that Martin Luther King Jr. Day is a day not only for relaxation, but also for recognition and realization.

Americans should recognize how close society has come to achieving King's dream as he described in "I Have a Dream."

However, Americans should also realize how far we have yet to go.

Prejudices still exist in the hearts of some Americans. We sometimes fail to see that someone different from ourselves deserves the same rights and the same protections.

In a world where no two people are alike, it is important that Americans celebrate each other's differences.

Let it be every American's duty to take time out on Monday to strive for ways to achieve King's dream.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Speaker for the world

Actor wrong in suggesting one person can represent all

ABBY HILES

It's a mad, mad, mad, mad world out there.

And right now major changes are about to be made in governments and nations across this great earth.

For instance, elections were held in the Gaza Strip this past Sunday, and the entire population of the world is now watching to see how these elections will affect the Palestinian nation.

Illustrations by Elvis Achel | COLLEGIAN

With that serious stuff aside, here comes the kicker: Last week, in the heat of the election, actor Richard Gere announced to Palestinian voters that he was "speaking for the entire world."

Gere appeared in broadcast commercials last week urging Palestinians to "Get out and vote" in the election to replace former president Yasser Arafat.

I'm sorry, but I think Gere missed the boat on that one. Getting out and voting in Gaza? Shouldn't we be voting for the one person who's speaking for the rest of us?

This isn't about replacing Arafat and seeking peace in the Middle East. What about the voice of the people? Who chose him?

Yeah, Richard, where was the vote on that one?

I know that if I had to choose a person to voice the heart and opinion of 6.4 billion people, I doubt it would be a cheesy movie actor who once played an officer who wasn't quite a gentleman.

And I also probably wouldn't choose an American right now, especially since it has to do with voting. Americans really don't have the best track record when it comes to elections this past decade, so I doubt the world wants us center stage telling them how to muck it up.

I mean, look at who we voted into office for the next few years. I rest my case.

So, who would I choose?

I would choose someone relatable. Someone who people can reach out to and mesh with. Someone who isn't controversial, but who also isn't afraid of controversy. Someone with worldwide acclaim.

That's right folks: Mickey Mouse.

I officially cast my vote for the big guy with the big ears. A figure that can not only stand up for all of us and speak the truth, but also can use those big animated ears to listen to his constituents.

A figure that isn't afraid to go shirtless in public. Mickey should be the voice of the people.

Granted, he's a little short, his voice is in an octave that not even Kerri Strug on Helium can reach, and he hangs out with characters of questionable reputation, (Donald, an always scheming gangster and Goofy, a redneck with only two teeth) but his face is much more well-known around the world than Richard Gere.

All mocking and jokes aside though, I guess I just don't like the idea of someone claiming to be "speaking for the entire world."

Our world is filled with different peoples, cultures, nations and states that all bring something entirely different to the international table.

So why would someone want to wipe that all away and put one face on 6.4 billion people?

Maybe Gere just doesn't look at it that way.

In any case, speaking for the entire world comes with some pretty big responsibility, and I for one don't really think that Gere is qualified.

Even if he is friends with the Dalai Lama.

Embarrassments should just be laughed off

Jessica Simpson embarrasses herself in front of millions of people and is getting rich because of it. Only in America.

That girl can act like the biggest ditz and be adored for it. It has been grossing her millions of dollars on her hit TV show. I'd really like to meet someone who watches that show for any other reason.

ANNIE LEWIS

When Jessica thinks she is eating real buffalo wings, she laughs it off, and America laughs with her.

Don't get me wrong – she is actually my hero. I make more social faux pas than she ever does, yet she makes it look cute and glamorous.

I usually react to embarrassment in the wrong way. The blood rushes to my face, I feel nauseous and I immediately leach onto the closest person to me in order to land safely back in reality.

Allow me to illustrate the wrong way to react with a little story that happened to me recently.

Just the other day I was grocery shopping with my roommate. We needed a cart and the weather was at an arctic temperature, so I tried to be fast. I saw an elderly gentleman wheeling a cart back to the cart grouping and decided to be a Good Samaritan and help him out.

I asked politely if he was merely returning the cart, and if so, I could take it inside for him. I swear the ice made my lips freeze because he did not understand me. I asked, "Are you going to use this? If not, can I?" He gave it to me.

Then he proceeded to shop inside without a cart, because I had his.

This was not the first and will definitely not be the last time I dart into the dog food aisle, ashamed. I just hope next time I won't be hiding from a kindhearted fellow who gave me his cart because he thought I needed it more than he did.

When people become pros at something, they are able to perform their skills with effortless ease. No matter how good I get at embarrassing myself, it never gets any easier.

There are other options available if the run-and-hide technique is not your favorite.

It has been said that laughter is the best medicine, so if you accidentally tuck your skirt into your underwear after going to the bathroom, make a joke about how you are starting the latest trend.

The laughter will help the whole situation become a joke, and it eases the tension between you and others.

That is why Jessica Simpson is my hero. Whenever she makes a comment that puzzles people, she acts as though she honestly does not know the answer to it.

As for me, I don't think I will ever make my mishaps look nearly as glamorous as Jessica Simpson does. And who can make belching as sexy as Cameron Diaz?

For us lowly humans, we are left with a choice: to laugh at ourselves or hide among the canine cuisine and pray for swift removal.

I mean let's face it. How human are you if you never say or do anything something "stupid"?

I say, forget about it. Social blunders are far too common to freak out over them every time they happen. Become the world's best comedian, and laugh it off.

Oh, and by the way Will, I have a boyfriend.

Varney's needs to not be such a rip-off and to have more cashiers during their busiest time of the year.

I love being the only one man enough to wear shorts in January.

I just had to use the ice scraper on the inside of my car. Is that normal?

To all the girls who think that their furry-like eskimo boots up-to-their knees or jeans looks cute or cool, no. Just stop, you look stupid.

Who's that guy!

To the guys who cleared off the football parking lot, thank you for making a nice little runway in between the ice sheets for getting up speed for kitties.

Separation of church, state must be restored

By Ray Lemoine
DAILY NEBRASKAN (U. NEBRASKA)

On Jan. 7, 2005, the infamous atheist Michael Newdow, of Pledge of Allegiance fame, filed a lawsuit in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

His lawsuit seeks to prohibit clergy-led prayer at President George W. Bush's inauguration, tentatively scheduled for Jan. 14.

Newdow's case already has been heard, and by no less liberal an institution than San Francisco's 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

They responded by summarily dismissing the case as "futile" because he had apparently not endured "a sufficiently concrete and specific injury." Apparently the spotlight seeking Newdow is not so easily deterred.

How is it that in a ceremony where the president will place his hand on a Bible, swear to do his best so help him God and undoubtedly quote scripture and appeal to God in his inaugural address, Newdow has decided to invoke the Establishment Clause, not on the symbol of our government, but rather on clergy invited to attend?

The Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause are commonly used to refer to the portion of the First Amendment which states "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

Nowhere in the First Amendment is there a reference to the mythical "separation of church and state." The First Amendment also contains no reference to a freedom from religion.

The Supreme Court first considered the meaning of the Establishment Clause in 1947 in the case Everson vs. Board of Education.

It was here the Court embraced the notion that the Establishment Clause did more than simply prohibit a state religion.

Since then, the courts have adopted a jurisprudence mandating a total separation of church from government.

The American Civil Liberties Union and other haters are quick to point out Thomas Jefferson said there should be a "wall of separation between church and state."

It never is mentioned that none of the other 38 signers of the constitution said that. Indeed, the Founding Fathers would have no doubt been shocked to see the current state of our Republic.

The very same Congress that proposed the Bill of Rights opened every legislative day with prayer, and voted to spend federal dollars to send Christian missionaries to the Indians! The very first faith-based initiative.

It is laughable to suggest, as the 1947 court did, that the Establishment Clause was intended by the Founding Fathers to be so sweepingly interpreted. It flies in the face of logic, as well as the historical record.

It has been crammed down our collective throats for some time now that the founders intended for this to be a secular nation. This is simply untrue.

During President George Washington's first Thanksgiving Proclamation he stated, "Whereas it is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the providence of the Almighty God, to obey his will, to be grateful for his benefits, and humbly implore His protection and favor ..." and continues to implore the nation to thank Almighty God.

That doesn't sound like a Founding Father seeking a secular state. Indeed, in its 1892 decision in the case Church of the Holy Trinity vs. United States, the Supreme Court wrote:

"Our laws and our institutions must necessarily be based upon and embody the teachings of The Redeemer of mankind.

It is impossible that it should be otherwise; and in this sense and to this extent our civilization and our institutions are emphatically Christian ...

This is a religious people. This is historically true. From the discovery of this continent to the present hour, there is a single voice making this affirmation ... we find everywhere a clear recognition of the same truth ... These, and many other matters which might be noticed, add a volume of unofficial declarations to the mass of organic utterances that this is a Christian nation."

Without exception, every presidential inaugural address and even every state Constitution makes reference to the Almighty God of the universe.

A nation founded on secular ideals? Hardly.

The United States was the first test case for religious freedom and tolerance.

These ideas were cultivated and grown within the embrace of a historically Christian nation. These ideas are not mutually exclusive, and indeed the first ultimately yielded the latter.

Disturbingly, as the courts continue to legislate away, rather than protecting freedom of religion, the judicial system seems to have created a right to freedom from being offended by religion.

No such guarantee appears in the Constitution.

It is time for Americans to insist that the Establishment Clause be restored to its proper meaning.

Wefald encourages volunteer participation

Dear K-State Faculty, Staff and Students,

As you know, the university is closed on Monday, January 17th in recognition of Martin Luther King Jr. Day. People around the country will continue a 10-year tradition of making this holiday "a day ON, not a day OFF" through volunteer work in their communities. We in Manhattan will join them.

The life of Dr. King is a prime example of the power of service, and there is no better way to honor his legacy than by participating in Monday's MLK Day of Service. I encourage everyone to take the time given for observance and use it to serve the community that gives so much support to K-State throughout the year.

To sign up to participate or for more information, contact the K-State Community Service Program at 532-5701 or ksuserve@ksu.edu.

All volunteers will meet at the Center Court of Manhattan Town Center before going to one of 14 project sites to serve. The opportunity is open to everyone in the community, so you may bring family members and friends as well.

I am proud of the K-State family's commitment to diversity, equality and service, and I thank you in advance for sharing your talents and time to strengthen this great community of Manhattan.

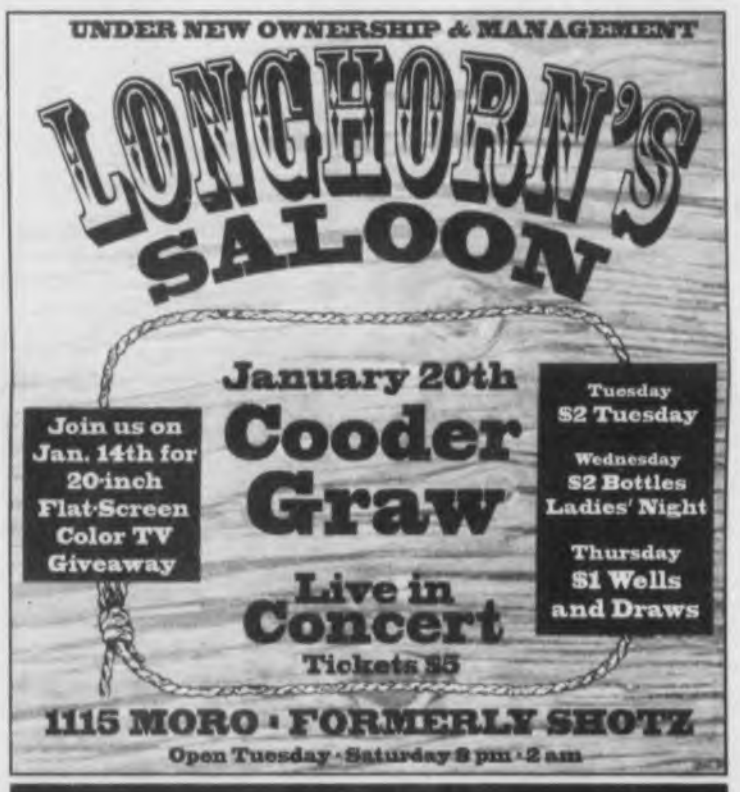
College students should donate to tsunami victims

Dear Editor,

I really appreciated the article in Wednesday's Collegian regarding the tsunami in SE Asia. I'm a K-State alum living and working in Japan.

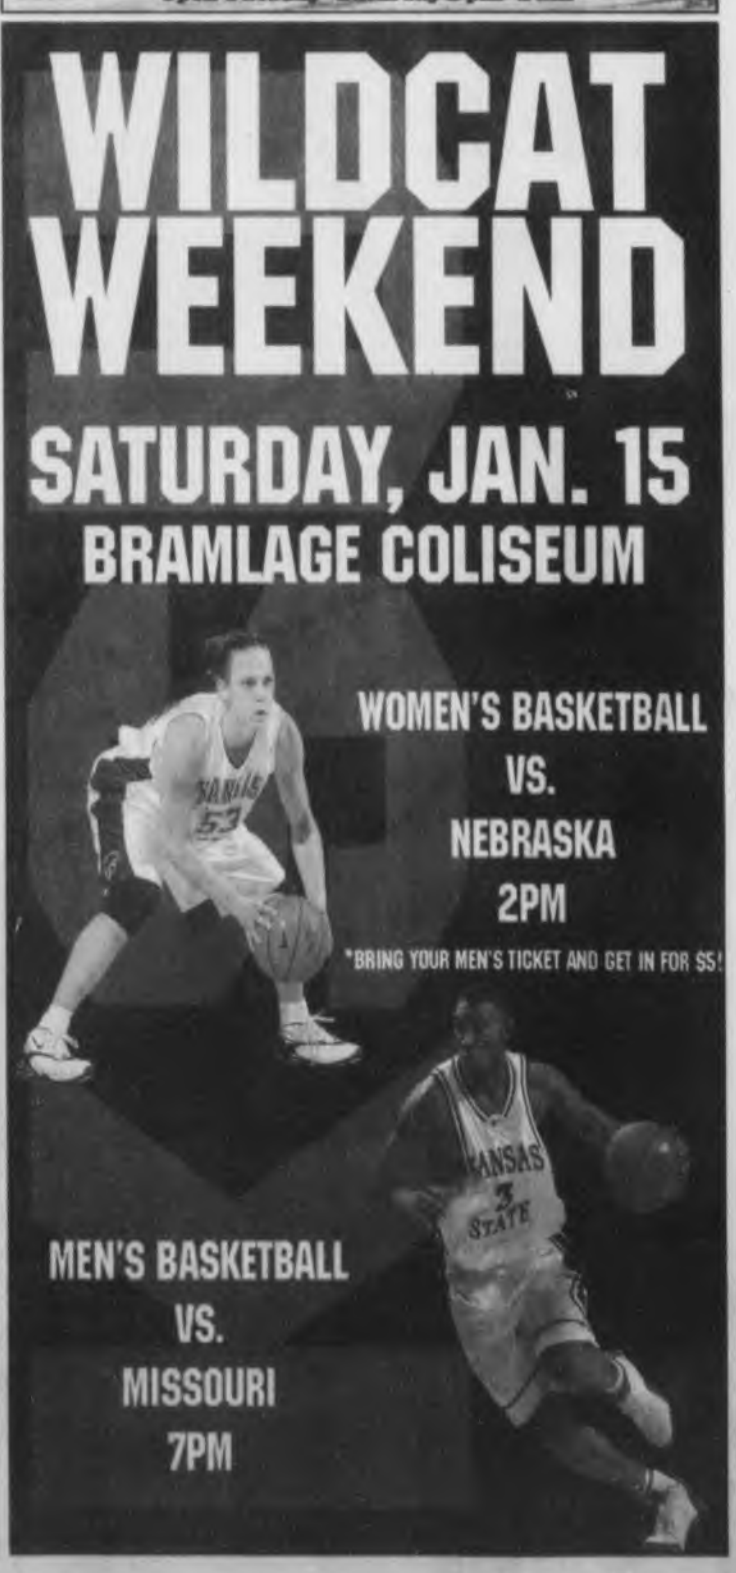
I was holidaying on Langkawi Island off the Thailand/Malaysia border when the tsunami hit. Luckily, the waters surrounding the island group were not deep enough to produce a massive tsunami like those which hit so many other places.



Deaths on the island were minimal though fishing villages, boats, cars, motorbikes and a few hotels were damaged or destroyed. Those affected are generally those who had nothing to spare.

Thanks for pointing out that any donation can make a huge difference in the lives of those who survived the disaster.

To donate, visit www.unicef.org. I know when I was a college student I thought I was poor.



But if you have even $50 in the bank and a roof over your head, you're better off than countless others.

K-State searching for first conference win

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Jeremiah Massey shoots over Texas Tech's Ronald Ross during Wednesday's game. The Wildcats take on Missouri at 7 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum. Massey is averaging 16.2 points per game and 6.3 rebounds a game this season for the Wildcats.

Starting Big 12 Conference play 0-2, K-State hosts Missouri on Saturday

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This is not where Coach Jim Wooldridge and the K-State Wildcats wanted to be.

The Wildcats (10-3, 0-2) entered the Big 12 Conference season with a 10-1 record, the squad's best start before league play since the 1997-98 Wildcats jumped out to 9-1.

But two narrow losses later, K-State is still searching for its first Big 12 win as the team prepares to face Missouri (9-6, 1-1) at 7 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

"We've done exactly what we didn't want to do," Wooldridge said. "We've dug ourselves a hole, and now we've got to dig out."

The Wildcats are a matter of seconds from a 2-0 conference mark.

Last Saturday, with K-State up by two at Nebraska, Cornhusker Marcus Neal was fouled on a three-point attempt with one second to play in regulation. Neal hit 2-of-3 free throws, sending the game into overtime. Nebraska eventually won 95-85 in double-overtime.

Then on Wednesday, Texas Tech's Curtis Marshall canned a 3-pointer with two seconds left in regulation to give the Red Raiders a 79-76 win over the Wildcats at Bramlage.

Sophomore center Tyler Hughes, who had a career-high 10 points against Texas Tech, said the reason behind the close losses might be psychological.

"I feel we just need to be a little more mentally tougher," Hughes said.

One thing that has not been an issue so far in Big 12 play has been the Wildcats' ability to hit outside shots.

K-State followed up a 10-of-18 performance from behind the arc against Nebraska with a season-high 13 three's on 19 attempts against the Red Raiders.

Despite the Wildcats' torrid outside shooting, Wooldridge said he does not want the perimeter shot to be his team's crutch.

"I think the three-point shot is fool's gold in a lot of ways. I've always believed that," Wooldridge said. "One night you shoot it well, the next night you don't. You've got to get to the free throw line and more in the lane. If you can do that, you can play pretty consistent for a long period during the season."

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey – the team's leading scorer and rebounder – is the key ingredient to the aggressiveness in the paint Wooldridge talks about.

After 15 points on 7-of-11 shooting against Texas Tech, Massey said his mobility is much better though he is still experiencing the effects of a right ankle sprain he suffered Jan. 3 against Central Missouri State.

"It bothered me, but I can play through it," Massey said. "I moved a lot better on it tonight (Wednesday)."

Against Missouri, the Wildcats will face another difficult challenge in searching for their first conference win.

The Tigers gave No. 6 Oklahoma State a tough game on Tuesday, leading 52-51 over the Cowboys in the second half, before eventually falling 78-68 on the road.

Missouri also has a win over No. 16 Gonzaga to its credit.

No matter what confidence the Tigers bring into Bramlage, Massey said the Wildcats are ready to vent some frustration from the past week's losses on their next opponent.

"I know these guys," said Massey of the Wildcats following the Texas Tech game. "They're a bunch of tough guys who just want to win. We just got to take it out on Missouri."

Domenico takes pride in defense

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior guard Chelsea Domenico probably isn't going to score 20 points a game.

She might never grab 10 rebounds a game and she won't be known as a threat to take over a contest.

All of that is fine with her.

"(Defense) has always been my strongest point," Domenico said. "It always gets me going when we get defensive stops."

While she is only averaging 1.6 points per game this season, Domenico has an impressive 2.4 assists for every turnover and she has recorded 12 steals for the No. 23 K-State Wildcats.

Senior guard Laurie Koehn said Domenico's role on the team is one that often goes unnoticed by the opposition.

"I think she is probably underestimated by a lot of teams," Koehn said.

"She is such a solid player out there and so dependable and she is just one of those players you can really count on."

As K-State (11-3, 2-1) prepares to play Nebraska (11-4, 3-0) Saturday, Domenico will be asked to slow a Husker team coming off a 103-99 triple-overtime upset win over No. 2 Baylor Wednesday.

Head Coach Deb Patterson said she was not surprised by the Huskers' big win.

"Going into that game, we thought it might be a really interesting matchup because Nebraska plays physical, they drive the ball at you and it was obviously just an incredible basketball game like you'd expect in the Big 12," Patterson said.

Domenico said the Wildcats will have to counter Nebraska's enthusiasm if they hope to avoid being Nebraska's next victim.

"They're physical and we have to expect that," she said.

"In the Big 12, you can't take anyone lightly."

Chelsea Domenico battles for a loose ball against Emporia State earlier this season. The Wildcats will play Nebraska Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Major League Baseball falls short on punishment policy

MATTHEW GIRARD

The glow of the Boston Red Sox's miracle World Series victory could only last so long for Major League Baseball.

The steroid issue may have taken a seat on the backburner to the BoSox, but on Thursday the MLB got back to business on the issue by coming up with changes to its steroid punishment and testing policies to try and restore some credibility to the sport.

The changes include stricter penalties, year-round testing, offseason testing and testing for more substances.

Now, I applaud the MLB for making changes to the testing policies. No longer can players wiggle their way out of testing by passing one test and then not having to worry about being tested again. This is the way it should have been in the original agreement.

The penalty changes, on the other hand, are not quite there and it's not just baseball.

It has been reported, on the first offense a player will be suspended for no more than 10 games. The National Football League and National Basketball Association have similar policies for a first offense, with the NFL suspending players for four games and the NBA for five.

Steroids is cheating.

Take cheating on an exam or a term paper, for example. You may think you are sneaky by writing the answers on the bill of your cap or programming them into your cell phone, but once you get caught, well, we all know what will happen, thanks to K-State's honor code we hear on the first day of classes. You're toast in that class and you may never get the chance to make it up. The possible ramifications could extend long beyond your college days.

The policy also falls short by letting a player test positive for steroids or other banned drugs up to four times before receiving a one-year ban.

Why is the MLB giving its players so many chances to cheat?

The 1919 'Black Sox' never got a second chance. Then – commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis banned eight Chicago White Sox players for life after throwing the World Series against the Cincinnati Reds.

I used to think Landis' ban was harsh, but maybe his punishment wasn't that far off.

What happens when a player breaks another record and then turns out to be on steroids? After what number of positive tests do we put an asterisk behind that record?

Before we know it, every stat from batting average to how many times a player waved to his mom with a two-strike count will be scarred with an ugly *.

MLB | Owners unanimously approve sale of Brewers

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Major league owners unanimously approved the $223 million sale of the Milwaukee Brewers on Thursday from the family of commissioner Bud Selig to Mark Attanasio.

Attanasio, a Los Angeles investor, is committed to keeping the team in Milwaukee, thanks to a 30-year lease to play in Miller Park.

Selig's daughter Wendy has been running the franchise since her father became commissioner.

The team has struggled to be competitive in recent years but has made several player moves in the offseason thanks to the prospect of new ownership.

MLB | Players, owners forge new steriod agreement

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Saying it wanted to restore confidence in the game, baseball rolled out a tougher steroid-testing program Thursday that includes penalties for first-time offenders and random, year-round checks.

Selig

"I've been saying for some time my goal for this industry is zero tolerance toward steroids," baseball commissioner Bud Selig said.

A first positive test would result in a suspension of up to 10 days, a second positive test a 30-day ban, a third positive a 60-day penalty, and a fourth positive test a one-year ban.

Under the previous agreement, a first positive test resulted only in treatment, and a second positive test was subject to a 15-day suspension. Only with a fifth positive test was a player subject to a one-year ban under the old plan.

NBA | Ford ruled out for rest of season after surgery

MILWAUKEE — Milwaukee Bucks guard T.J. Ford was ruled out for the rest of the season Thursday during his recovering from spinal surgery.

Ford

Ford's spinal cord bruise continues to improve but has not healed enough for him to start any type of basketball activity, the team said after consulting with doctors. He has missed the entire season for the Bucks (12-21).

Ford, the eighth overall pick in the 2003 NBA draft, had surgery May 5. He was injured when he was knocked down going to the basket in a February 2004 game against Minnesota and was carried off the court on a stretcher.

CBB | Southern California hiring Tim Floyd as coach

LOS ANGELES — Tim Floyd is being hired as Southern California basketball coach, taking the job Rick Majerus accepted then abruptly quit last month.

Floyd

USC spokesman Tim Tessalone said Thursday that a news conference will be held Friday afternoon on campus to introduce Floyd.

The former Chicago Bulls and New Orleans Hornets coach will return to the college ranks, where he was 35-25 in two seasons at Idaho; 127-58 in six seasons at the University of New Orleans, and 81-47 in four years at Iowa State.

High School | Vermont high-school athletes score 7

MILTON, Vt. — Hard to imagine a 3-pointer in the second quarter of a high school boy's basketball game would turn out to be the winning basket — unless it's one of only three made in the entire game.

That basket, along with an earlier field goal, was all Bellows Free Academy-Fairfax needed to beat Milton on Wednesday night. The final score: 5-2.

To the team's credit, the score was the result of an apparently deliberate stalling strategy.

Meals in minutes

Making food at home can be quick, cheap and healthy

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The "freshman 15." Love handles. Spare tires. All of these strike fear into the hearts of health-conscious university students everywhere.

Unfortunately, hectic class schedules, jobs and money problems make it difficult to avoid the source of much of this unwanted cellulite: fast food.

Though fast food is, well, fast and cheap, it is possible to prepare timely, frugal meals that don't taste like a burlap sack filled with dried buffalo grass (it isn't good, trust me).

With your emaciated wallets, brutal schedules and "fat jeans" in mind, I have compiled a healthy breakfast, lunch and dinner list that you can prepare in the same amount of time it would take to pull through Burger King, and that you can purchase easily and cheaply at your local grocer.

According to the website www.ivillage.co.uk the average cappuccino contains 150 calories, and a croissant or doughnut contains 118 calories.

These have virtually no redeeming health value besides carbohydrates, so if you aren't looking to tip the scales, try a fruit smoothie instead.

This is much more simple than it seems. Combine 1 banana, 3.5 ounces of crushed pineapple, 2 ounces of mango, 1 diced peach and 1 glass of skim milk in the blender and put it in the refrigerator overnight. All you have to do the next day is blend the ingredients for about a minute and you're ready to go.

Lunch is simple too, as I'm sure you're already aware. Try making a deli sandwich with vegetables as a side instead of chips. If you don't have the time to go home between classes, take two minutes and prepare it before you go to school.

You can also drink your lunch (no, not the kind that comes in a flask or a six-pack). Take some vegetable soup to school in a thermos and drink it from the lid/mug.

Most people consider dinner to be a very time-consuming meal, but this is merely a myth. You can't ever go wrong with chicken, so make some quick chicken fajitas.

But chicken takes time to cook, you say, and you're right. So don't cook it.

You can buy pre-cooked chicken in a multitude of flavors at the store. It actually isn't dried out and does taste good.

While the chicken strips are heating up in the microwave, saute peppers, onions, tomatoes or mushrooms in a pan for about five minutes.

Throw in some cumin, cayenne pepper or Morton's Hot Salt for flavor.

Next, combine the chicken, vegetables, low-fat cheese and picante sauce of your choice in a warmed flour tortilla and enjoy. The whole process should take about ten minutes.

Well, this should be both enlightening and mouth-watering. I've drawn you the map to cheap, tasty food, and now it's up to you to explore.

Uncomfortable celebrity

Neo-folk cinematography professor turns devastating loss into beauty

"Our Endless Numbered Days"
Album review by Jessica Grant

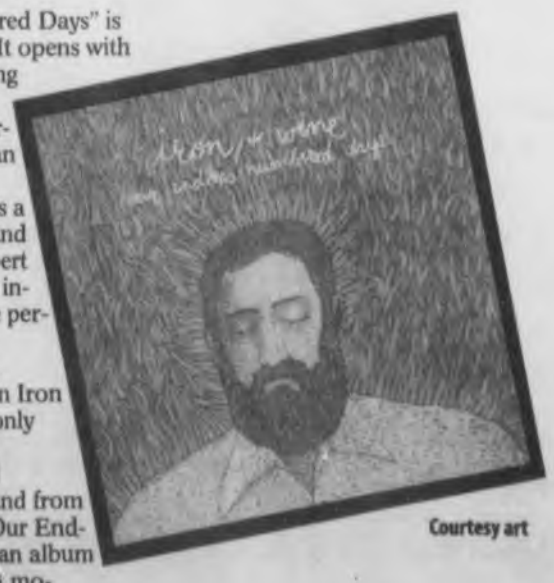
If people have heard of Sam Beam's neo-folk project Iron and Wine, they are probably most familiar with the picture of Beam posted on Sub-Pop's Web site that has been used in numerous magazine features.

It is a simple head shot of the skinny musician in a tugged-on green t-shirt sitting in an aged wicker chair, an air of solemnity permeating the photo. There is something almost comical about the picture. Beam's full beard and earnest dark eyes are not enough to keep the man from looking somehow like a small child.

Beam is obviously not comfortable with celebrity status.

However, this cinematography professor from Miami may have to deal with more press than he bargained for after recording one of the best albums in the burgeoning genre known by critics as neo-folk.

"Our Endless Numbered Days" is an album that has an air of intimacy. There is a wide array of emotions and ideas conquered on the album. Even the title calls to mind somewhat paradoxical feelings of immortality and loss.



The pace of the album is gentle, soft and comforting and Beam's veiled lyrics are poetic and subversive. In the song "Naked as We Came," Beams plays into the mysterious title, cooing "One of us will die inside these arms/ Eyes wide open, naked as we came/ One of us will spread our ashes around the yard."

"Cinder and Smoke" is the longest track on the album and one that tackles a somewhat macabre subject in the most uplifting manner. The song is about a family whose farmhouse burns to the ground while the family watches, clinging to their few remaining possessions. However, Beam has the ability to make even the travesty of devastating loss oddly beautiful.

"Our Endless Numbered Days" is not a depressing album. It opens with "On Your Wings" a sliding acoustic guitar-driven song with snippets of percussion that swells into an oddly rockin' jam.

"Teeth in the Grass" is a song accentuating Iron and Wine's ability to create pert numbers where acoustic instruments emphasize the perfect harmonic blend of Beam's voice and guitar.

Beam may have begun Iron and Wine in 1999 with only himself and a four-track recorder, but his musical prowess has lifted the band from simply a 'side project'. "Our Endless Numbered Days" is an album that plays to the loneliest moments of humanity in the most strangely inspiring manner.

El Cazador opens; Arby's to be built in Seth Child Commons

Nicole Coleman | COLLEGIAN
A new Arby's will be opening up in Seth Child Commons along with Famous Dave's Restaurant and Pier One Imports. Seth Child Commons already houses Panera Bread Bakery and Target.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Looking around Manhattan, some changes may be noticed. Part of those changes are happening in the dining scene.

New restaurants are being built and opened, and old restaurants have reopened.

One new dining addition to Manhattan is Famous Dave's Barbecue, said Lyle Butler, president of Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce.

It is slated to open in late January at Seth Child Commons and is nearly complete with its construction, he said.

Famous Dave's offers a menu of fish, chicken, burgers, St. Louis-style ribs and barbecue, according to their Web site.

Another restaurant being built in Manhattan is Shake's Frozen Custard.

Shake's is planning to build at 5th Street and Fort Riley Boulevard. It is under construction, and the opening date is slated to be March or April, said Frank Settle, regional manager.

According to its Web site, Shake's, a national ice cream chain, offers a menu including sundaes, shakes, floats and ice cream, as well as the Splash, a frozen fruit drink.

Settle said he is glad Shake's is opening in Manhattan.

"We think it's a wonderful town and we think that what we do is something that people will like," he said.

Arby's Roast Beef will construct a new restaurant at Seth Child Commons.

They have not started building and have not set a possible opening date yet, said Blaise Kroenke, manager.

The current Arby's at 1115 Bluemont Ave. will remain open despite the opening of a new restaurant, he said.

Kroenke said the reason for expansion is the current location is very busy and they want business to reach more of Manhattan.

"Arby's wants to get more revenue from the west side," he said.

El Cazador, 3003 Anderson Ave., reopened their doors on Dec. 11.

El Cazador closed in August after 15 employees were discovered to be illegal aliens.

There are also several undisclosed restaurants looking to build in Manhattan, Butler said.

He said there are national chain restaurants, as well as some locally-owned ones, looking to open to Manhattan in the near future, including the possibility of a seafood restaurant.

Butler said new restaurants in Manhattan will help the local economy, as well as provide a variety of dining choices.

"They will create more employment for students as well as the community," Butler said.

New grant funds military history studies

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State has received $500,000 to study military history.

The grant was awarded by the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH), a grant-making agency dedicated to supporting research, education, preservation and public programs in the humanities.

While some of the money for the grant is coming from the federal budget, K-State will also be receiving money from the NEH.

Thomas Adams, an staff member in education programs, said NEH will match one dollar to every $2 in non-federal funds that are raised to support the grant.

Specific dates are yet to be determined, but the new project, officially titled The Institute for Military History and 20th Century Studies, is expected to be underway soon.

According to a news release from Roberts' Washington D.C. office, the project will include symposia, graduate fellowships and fundraising.

It will also bring an endowment for a faculty chair, faculty and graduate fellowships, programs and acquisitions in this program.

Mark Parillo, the project director for the grant and associate professor of history, said the money will be well spent.

Parillo said that while it is still negotiable as to where the money will go exactly, the majority of the grant will be spent on studies of the common soldier in American history. This could take form as collections of archives, publication of works, and various psychological and historical studies, all concerning the common soldier.

The common soldier was chosen as the emphasis of study because Kansas is centrally located.

In fact, K-State is the perfect place to harvest such studies because of its long tradition in military history, Parillo said.

"We have the expertise, resources and location to become a place where people can go when they have questions about the typical American soldier or military experience of the common person," he said.

As many other colleges appear to be cutting back on the study of military history, K-State is emerging as one of the few top colleges in the country in this field, Parillo said.

Already in the works is a new masters degree program by the United States Army Command and General Staff College in Leavenworth, Kan., for people who are either serving officers or otherwise employed by the military.

Many more new developments are on the way.

Parillo envisions the program resulting in the development of new courses and scholarships, as well as reaching out to new students who otherwise might not attend K-State.

"We certainly hope that we will become an even greater center for scholarship, and that it will attract more students and attention to military history," Parillo said.

New alumni board to increase support for international tours, guest artists

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new alumni board has been created to support students in the K-State Concert Choir and the Chorale.

The K-State Choirs Advisory Council was established by students and alumni of the choir and chorale.

The board in turn will hopefully help bring more publicity to the quality choir program at K-State.

They plan to address issues such as increasing support for international and national tours, bringing in esteemed guest artists, updating performance wardrobes, attracting top high school senior singers and maintaining steady donors to the program.

An inaugural meeting last fall had 23 people in attendance, including students and alumni.

Jay Peters, senior in vocal performance, said he was glad to see alumni return.

"It was really great to see all the alumni come back and show their interest in the choir," Peters said.

Eight students serve on the council, allowing for alumni to be closer to students' wants and needs, including funding.

"One of our goals is to establish an endowment that would allow students to perform all over the world without bearing the bulk of the cost," Peters said.

"The more we can be out there in the public eye instead of just performing two concerts per semester would benefit the entire university."

Jay Peters
SENIOR IN VOCAL PERFORMANCE

The choir has performed in places such as Russia, Vienna, Australia and New York.

They hope to continue traveling, but students pay their own travel expenses. Minimal public fundraising is done in order to keep the prestige of being a top ranked university choir.

The council hopes the alumni board will benefit the entire music department by being able to showcase its talents on a wider scale.

"The more we can be out there in the public eye instead of just performing two concerts per semester would benefit the entire university," Peters said.

Informal plans for the board began in April 2003 after the choir performed at Carnegie Hall in New York City.

This was the first time the alumni and students were able to perform together outside of K-State.

The New York alumni of the music department held a banquet afterwards for the singers in which ideas were brainstormed on organizing and establishing an official council for its loyal members. At the inaugural meeting the board set up a K-State Concert Choir Development Plan.

John Works, the advisory council newsletter editor, said the plan includes producing an annual program newsletter that make contact easier between alumni and the choir.

"We also want expand and revise the concert choir website and solidify an advisory council," he said.

The council will meet again in November 2005 to discuss progress and ideas for future programs.

Both the K-State Chorale and K-State Concert Choir are open to men and women who are music majors and non-music majors alike.

Peters said over 55 percent of enrollment in the Concert Choir are non-music majors.

"We have many members who sang in high school and want to continue it for pleasure but not major in it," Peters said.

Multicultural honorary returns

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Snacking on baklava, pasta and Doritos, the members of Sigma Iota Rho Honorary talked and laughed with one another as they watched TV.

While to some it may appear to be just another night with friends, this gathering is really a miniature festival of nations.

Sigma Iota Rho is an international relations honor society that provides students the opportunity to discuss and learn more about the importance of international relations.

On campus since 1999, the honorary was disbanded a couple years later because of members graduating and a lack of student interest.

Sigma Iota Rho was re-established on campus last semester after two students took interest in starting it up again.

Monica Wescott and Sandy Burnett, the students who initiated re-establishing the honorary, said at first they were interested in starting another type of club.

"We started talking about starting an international food club and about how much fun that would be," said Wescott, a senior in political science and president of Sigma Iota Rho.

Wescott and Burnett were first introduced to Sigma Iota Rho when they mentioned their idea to Jeffrey Pickering, associate professor of political science and adviser of the honorary.

Their ideas seemed similar, and Wescott and Burnett spent the past summer working to bring Sigma Iota Rho back to campus.

"We had lots of meetings where we kind of brainstormed ideas to get the word out to people, also to get some ideas about things to do that we thought would be fun," said Burnett, senior in political science and vice president of the honorary.

Ideas for the upcoming semester include bringing in guest speakers, holding international food and movie nights and starting a faculty coffee hour.

Faculty members would come and talk to students about international relations in a relaxed atmosphere.

Pickering said he was excited about the members' plans for the honorary.

"I'm thrilled," Pickering said. "They have wonderful ideas and they are beginning to implement them. There's a lot of energy in the group."

Wescott said she and Burnett were happy with the students' response at their first meeting of 12 students.

"It doesn't sound like a lot, but Sandy and I were very pleased for a group that just started out," Wescott said, adding that more students have contacted her to express interest.

Students interested in becoming members of Sigma Iota Rho must meet a few requirements.

Students must be of junior standing, have a cumulative 3.2 GPA and have taken at least 20 hours of international relations classes.

For those students who don't meet the requirements yet, the honorary accepts associate members.

Burnett said the honorary will be recruiting new members this semester.

As for the future of the honorary, Burnett said she is positive that this Sigma Iota Rho won't suffer the same fate as the first.

"I feel pretty good about it," Burnett said. "We've got a lot of members with different ideas about what we can do to keep things going."

Wildcats focus on road ahead

Track team to host Wildcat Invitational this weekend in preparation for upcoming challenge with KU, Missouri

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Right now, the future is more important than the present to K-State head coach Cliff Rovelto.

Rovelto's track and field squad returns to action today and Saturday as it hosts the Wildcat Invitational and Wildcat Pentathlon/Heptathlon at Ahearn Field House, and for the second straight week, the Wildcats will not field an entire team.

Rovelto said his decision to hold some athletes out is for the good of the team.

"Our sport is different, and we understand that," he said. "We just can't ask too much of all the kids every time we have a meet. Even a lot of our better athletes that are competing aren't competing in their best events."

Rovelto, in his 13th year as K-State's head coach, said he does not want to overlook this weekend's meet, but his ultimate focus remains on preparing his team for conference and national competition.

"I don't want to be cavalier about it and say that I don't care, because we always do care," Rovelto said. "We're always trying to compete as best we can each week."

Coach Rovelto said the coaches will withhold some K-State athletes from participating in certain events to prevent injury, boredom or staleness.

But some of K-State's top athletes will compete in their primary events for the first time this season.

The men's 800-meter run and 600-yard run are events to watch Friday as past NCAA All-Americans Joseph Lee and Christian Smith will make their indoor-season debuts for the Wildcats.

Another event to keep an eye on is the women's pole vault, as junior Breanna Eveland returns to action a week after she tied the school record with a 13-05 1/4 vault.

Eveland's success contributed to the Wildcat women earning a No. 12 ranking in Trackwire's first Top 25 poll of the season.

Other Wildcat athletes competing this weekend include sprinter Monique Coleman, weight thrower Coby Cost, jumper and team captain Chaytan Hill and high jumper Kyle Lancaster.

Cost, a junior, owns K-State's indoor record in the weight throw and has yet to lose an indoor event this season.

He improved his NCAA Indoor Championships provisional qualifying mark at the KSU Invitational last weekend with a weight throw of 68-02 1/2.

The El Dorado native said his expectations continue to grow as he continues to improve, but his goal remains the same.

"My goal for every meet is to hit the (NCAA Championships) automatic qualifying mark," Cost said.

"The big goal is to do well at the conference meet and to make it to nationals."

Cost said he is prepared for a good showing this weekend so he can build on last week's performance.

The team faces its first challenge of the indoor season at the K-State-Kansas-Missouri Triangular next Saturday in Manhattan.

Coach Rovelto said K-State will showcase virtually all its healthy athletes in their best events at the triangular.

"We'll learn a lot more in the next couple weeks about how good a job we've done," Rovelto said.

"After that weekend, you probably wouldn't need to ask me how strong our team is because you'll have a pretty good idea just from watching that meet."

RENOVATION | Research facility nears completion

"This center is one of the most important tools to add value to the competitive foreign grain market, and I will remain firm in supporting developments in the research center."

With new challenges in the grain research industry, such as bioterrorism, alternative research methods, and competition in the foreign markets, Roberts said it was necessary to advance the GMPRC.

Other speakers, such as Rodney Brown, deputy under secretary in the U.S. Department of Agriculture, agreed with Roberts that renovations were much needed, and he said he admired Roberts' determination to lead the improvement efforts.

"We are very lucky to have a senator like Pat Roberts, who is such a great friend to agriculture, K-State and the USDA," Brown said.

Brown praised the abilities and hard work of the researchers and students involved with the GMPRC.

"If this building disappeared, the laboratory would still be here, because you all are the laboratory," Brown said.

"If the people disappeared, however, this building would be nothing more than a second-rate museum."

Lyle Butler, president and CEO of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said he had never seen such a collaborative effort among different parties to make such drastic improvements.

"I have never found a partnership so close as the University, the community and state," Butler said.

"With leadership like Roberts', who is passionate about agriculture and the state of Kansas, the facility will be able to grow and develop."

cense plates currently registered.

"We think it's a great program," James said.

Pittsburg State has had the program in place since early 2001. They make an average of $20,000 a year.

Wichita State currently has 883 license plates registered. Wichita State Alumni Association Membership Coordinator Margaret Ochs said they expect to make $28,000 each year from the license plates that sell for $35 each, $30 of which goes to the scholarship.

Sidener said many of the K-State administrators have the license plates on their vehicles. The plates can also be found on private vehicles.

"They've just chosen to purchase that tag for their personal vehicle," Sidener said.

"We get a lot of private companies that like to buy them for their company vehicles."

Sidener is very happy with the results of the Educational License Plate Scholarship Program.

"It's been very successful and very rewarding for the university," he said.

K-State senior killed in car accident Monday

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State senior was killed in a car accident Monday morning.

Dixie Spence, 22, pulled out in front of a pickup truck two miles north of her hometown of Hutchinson, Kan., according to reports.

The truck driver was not injured, but Spence died an hour later at Hutchinson Hospital.

The Reno County Sheriff's Office could not be reached for further details about the accident.

Spence, a fifth-year senior in apparel marketing and design, was an alumni member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority. She worked at American Eagle clothing store during her college years.

The Office of Student Life had not received word of her death and could not comment.

Meghan Coulter, Theta president, said she had been in contact with Spence's close friends after finding out about the death Monday afternoon.

Spence was planning her June wedding and had plans to move to Virginia.

"She was an amazing woman," Coulter said. "She touched so many lives. Members past and present will miss her dearly."

Funeral arrangements and campus memorial plans were still being discussed.

Spence was one of those members who attended every event with a smile on her face, Coulter said.

"We all loved her and will miss her so much," she said.

Newly painted shelves and walls will greet children when they enter the KSU Child Development Center.

Volunteers from around Manhattan helped commemorate the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday by helping various organizations. They worked with the motto "A day on, not a day off."

They painted shelves for the child development center at Jardine Apartments, cleaned up Tuttle Creek, organized the student programs and diversity office for the College of Agriculture and prepare ribbons for the Polar Bear Plunge for the Special Olympics of Northeast Kansas.

Amy Robinson, community service chair for the Bilingual Education Student Organization, said she expected 200 to 300 volunteers to help at the various organizations.

"I hope the volunteers realize there are places to help," Robinson said. "They should take pride in their service."

Students from BESO were site directors and volunteers for the different organizations.

Elizabeth Samson, freshman in geography, and her sister Kaitlyn Samson, junior in elementary education, volunteered as site leaders for the Child Development Center as a part of their community service for BESO.

"I wanted to get involved in my community," Elizabeth Samson said. "I wanted to do something better than sleep."

Kaitlyn Samson said although she volunteered as a part of BESO, she also wanted to serve to show her respect to Martin Luther King Jr.

"He helped to better others' lives," she said. "We commemorate him by doing small things that help our community stand out."

Coty Hinman, freshman in civil engineering, said she wanted to help at the Child Development Center because she wants to help children.

"I want to serve and help children in any way I can," Hinman said. "They're our future."

Those who volunteered for the Special Olympics of Northeast Kansas said they also wanted to help and work with children. They did so by making ribbons and medals for the Polar Bear Plunge which will take place in February.

"I thought I'd be working with kids," said Steve Jones, junior in public relations. "Even so, by doing this I'm giving something to unfortunate kids."

Jones said he plans to continue volunteering for the Special Olympics of Northeast Kansas in the future. He said he wants to be there for the athletes from the beginning to the end.

"I'm going to do whatever there is to do," he said.

Student government positions open; deadline nears

By Joanna Rubick

ELECTIONS 2005

The election filing deadline for Student Governing Association positions is 4 p.m. Feb. 18.

Student leadership will change during this semester.

President, vice president, senators and positions on the Union Governing Board and Board of Student Publications will be open. Students will also vote on their individual college councils.

Candidates are subject to the Elections Regulations Code, which can be found at www.ksu.edu/elections, however, changes are up for review at the Student Senate meeting at 7 p.m. Thursday in the Big 12 Room.

David McCandless, elections commissioner, said an important change made to the regulations, if passed, will include voting procedures. The proposed regulations won't allow campaigns to have students vote using laptops at their campaign tables.

These proposals are in response to problems with last year's voter fraud accusations, he said.

"This will keep candidates from pressuring voters to vote a certain way," McCandless said.

Other proposed changes include eliminating the Fine Arts Council and changing where campaigning is allowed, he said.

But before election day, candidates must file to run for office by 4 p.m. on Feb. 18.

McCandless said students should consider getting involved.

He said all positions aren't filled within one or two colleges every year. Usually the College of Human Ecology and the College of Education have trouble filling all their positions.

Students that have completed and are currently enrolled in 12 credit hours with a 2.0 grade point average or higher can run for office. Graduate students need a 3.0

Man arrested in connection with church burglaries

By Brigette Burandt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A man was arrested Saturday in connection with several Manhattan church burglaries.

The Riley County Police Department responded to a call from a citizen who reported a suspicious individual loitering in the vicinity of First United Methodist Church, 612 Poyntz Ave. There police arrested James Jack Cowan, 39.

The church had previously reported a theft on Jan. 8, when gift certificates were stolen from Judy Scharmann, who was attending a wedding. The gift certificates were intended as presents for the bride and groom.

"It's really disappointing, because you want to feel comfortable in a church," Scharmann said of the thefts.

Police have been investigating a series of church burglaries that began in November.

Based on information from previous cases, Cowan was detained for questioning. Further investigation revealed that Cowan was responsible for at least five church-related burglaries.

Detectives recovered stolen property and seized marijuana and drug paraphernalia while conducting a search of the suspect's room at the Westwood Motel, 2108 Fort Riley Blvd.

Cowan is now being held on five counts of burglary, including one count of aggravated burglary, as well as possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia. Bond was set at $30,000.

Flu vaccine now available to all Kansans

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Restrictions on the flu vaccination has been lifted in Kansas, making it available to all residents.

Previously, only high-risk individuals – including young children, the elderly and those with serious illnesses – could receive the vaccination.

Lafene Health Center Medical director Jay Reppert said the increase in the vaccine was due to both an increase in supply and a decrease in demand.

"They were able to come up with more vaccines than they originally thought they might get and not everyone who was eligible took the vaccine," he said. "That allowed more doses for more people."

Chuck Murphy, health officer for Riley County, said the Riley County Health Department will begin dispensing the rest of its supply to those who request a flu shot. However, he said there are only about 250 doses left.

"I suspect we will use up the remaining flu vaccine in the next couple of weeks," he said.

Murphy said the health department probably won't be able to purchase more after the supply is gone.

Although the flu is an epidemic, Reppert said it hasn't started in Federal aid process begins

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students wanting to get ahead start on their finances for next year should complete the Free Application for Federal Student Aid, or FAFSA, now.

K-State's deadline for the FAFSA application is March 1.

Filling out the FAFSA determines if students are eligible for the Pell Grant, subsidized or unsubsidized loans, Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant (SEOG), College Work Study or the Perkins Loan, said Tanya McGee, associate director of student financial assistance.

"That is the application that's used everywhere in the country to apply for federal financial aid," said Larry Moeder, director of student financial assistance.

"The application evaluates the financial need of the student by looking at family income and assets as well as expenses," he said.

To fill out the FAFSA, students must have their previous year's federal tax returns, as well as information on any assets including checking and savings accounts.

The same information is needed from the student's parents if the student is a dependent, or the student's spouse if the student is married, McGee said.

Other circumstances might make the student eligible for aid, such as family size or the number of children in college.

K-State students should also apply for scholarships to help with the cost of college. Many scholarships are merit-based.

"Definitely we like to encourage all students to apply for K-State scholarships," McGee said.

For students who are frustrated with the long FAFSA form, there are four financial advisers in the office available to help.

While the FAFSA asks for information on income and savings, it doesn't take into account any unusual circumstances or changes in income, such as the loss of a job.

"They're also available to just simply let students know what's available to them, what kind of financial assistance programs they can apply for," Moeder said.

While tax returns are not due until April 15, Moeder recommended students have their tax returns completed before filling out the FAFSA.

For more information
To find out more about the different kinds of federal aid, go to www.kstatecollegian.com.

The FAFSA is due so early in the year so that students have time to find out if they will receive aid before the school year starts.

"Students and their parents want to know as soon as possible what their eligibility is," Moeder said.

While there is a limited amount of money available for the SEOG, Perkins Loan and Work Study Program, McGee said that they never run out of money for the Pell Grant, subsidized loans or unsubsidized loans, so every student can receive some kind of aid if they fill out the FAFSA.

"Every student can qualify for some type of financial assistance as long as they haven't used it all up already," Moeder said.

Because of this, he recommends every student fill out the FAFSA.

"My advice to students is just do it. Go through the process at least once to find out where they stand in overall eligibility."

Student design, renovation of Seaton Hall saves K-State $1.5 million

By Matthew Peterworth
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Architecture students can be thanked for the two new classrooms and expanded Pierce Commons area in Seaton Hall.

Seaton was renovated by fifth-year architecture students for their studio project.

The project was organized because of a need for classrooms yet not enough money to contract the renovation to outside companies.

James Jones, former department head, suggested the possibility of a project in which students design the renovations and then construct it themselves.

Vladimir Krstic, professor of architecture, and Chris Spaw, architecture instructor, volunteered their studio classes for the work.

Krstic said that over the past three semesters, 40 students donated 12,000 hours to the project. In labor costs, Krstic estimated the university saved $400,000.

Money was also saved by using recycled materials. Old chalkboards from the recently demolished Denison Hall were used in the floor and walls of Pierce Commons.

Old doors were also recycled to make the four oversized doors leading into the new classrooms, which saved $10,000.

Ryan Deveney, fifth-year architecture student, said that what he got out of this was the opportunity to work with contractors on the project.

The immediate benefactors of the renovation are first year architecture students.

Lindsey Devries, who has class in one of the new rooms, said she likes the space because it was designed and built by upperclassmen.

Construction started in May of last year and was completed this past December.

Krstic said if this project had been contracted out, it would have cost almost $2 million.

However, in collaboration with students in his and Shaw's design studios, they were able to complete it for about a quarter of the cost, saving roughly $1.5 million.

TO THE POINT

Reforms needed to prevent vaccine shortage

Even though we have entered the peak of flu season, recent news has indicated that we are past the worst.

Citing increased supplies and low demand, the Kansas Department of Health and Environment is making the vaccine available to everyone. As the vaccine scare dissipates, now is the time to review this experience's lessons.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The most important lesson is that our health system is not broken. While weaknesses have been illuminated, our system was able to deal with the situation in the best manner possible.

The second lesson is that our Center for Disease Control needs to refine its information distribution systems. The CDC was caught ill-prepared in distributing necessary information. While it eventually succeeded in dispersing the information, refining its emergency informational procedures is needed.

One action to be avoided is trying to increase our vaccine suppliers. For example, MedImmune Inc. lost revenue when it increased production in response to a request from federal agents to produce more flu vaccine. While well-intentioned, asking companies to increase production is unnecessary because skyrocketing vaccine prices have drawn other corporations into the production of flu-related products.

While the flu vaccine shortage unnecessarily endangered thousands of people to a disease that annually kills over 30,000, the long term result is going to be a better system.

Putting kids first

Kansas Legislature disappoints by focusing on gays instead of education

Fix the schools.

The edict from above has been delivered, and we must do as the United States Supreme Court tells us.

SCOTT SEEL

If the legislature doesn't fix the schools by April 12, the court is taking over.

So, of course, funding for our K-12 education was the first thing on the Kansas Senate's agenda when the session began Jan. 12, right?

Wrong.

So maybe they're dealing with the skyrocketing price of health care that is pilfering our state bank account every day.

Nope, wrong again.

Maybe they are tackling some ingenious plan to stimulate the lagging Kansas economy.

Strike three.

Yes, far more important than our children receiving an adequate education or our poor and elderly being able to afford basic health care, far more important than promoting economic development to fix our ailing economy and subsequently easing the two problems mentioned above, one issue stands out as the logical choice for the first item on the agenda.

Gay people.

It seems that more important than all these things is a constitutional amendment establishing marriage as a union between one man and one woman – something already laid out verbatim in state law.

You see, when gay people get married, they hurt good family values much more than divorce or adultery.

And really, what would good education, adequate health care and a thriving local economy do for families?

But why, you ask? Why now?

Well, let's see what Sen. Dennis Wilson has to say.

In an Associated Press article from Jan. 14, Wilson, R-Overland Park, said, "Can we be sure that no activist judges or officials exist in Kansas?"

Why, no, Sen. Wilson, we can't. Tell me more!

"An amendment to our constitution is the only way to protect the sacred institution."

Sen. Wilson makes a good point. This resolution is the only way to ensure the law isn't ruled unconstitutional by some crazy, left-wing activist judge.

What Wilson fails to realize is that this is why we have judicial review – to interpret the constitution and determine if laws are in accordance with it.

In reality, if they're afraid this law might be unconstitutional, it probably is.

Essentially, we are just overhauling the entire principle of separation of powers and usurping the courts – if you're worried your law might be unconstitutional, just change the constitution.

That's rubbish.

It's too late for senators to see the light, but there is still hope.

I would hope every member of the Kansas House of Representatives would take a long look at this and realize that it is not only hateful, bigoted legislation that contradicts the 14th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, but it's just not the way our system works.

There was an unsuccessful effort to scale back the hateful rhetoric of the resolution by Sen. Vicki Schmidt, R-Topeka; however, she managed to lose her backbone and vote for the resolution.

I'd like to compliment Republicans like Manhattan's Sen. Roger Reitz who, unlike Sen. Schmidt, crossed the aisle of partisanship and voted for what is right, even when it wasn't popular at home or in Topeka.

Yes, I support homosexual unions or marriages or whatever you want to call them, but that's not my point.

Regardless of what you think about the issue, the fact of the matter is that our constitution is not designed to restrict the rights of citizens, and it's certainly not designed to be a tool to preempt judicial action.

If family values are so important, let's focus on things that actually affect families like education and health care, not divisive, hateful initiatives which are nothing more than a political tool to mobilize the radical right.

Several other Republican senators joined Sen. Reitz. One such senator, John Vratil of Leawood, said it best in his explanation vote, also quoted in the Jan. 14 Associated Press article.

"Never before in the history of our state have we added an amendment to the constitution that proactively discriminates against people.

The people we're discriminating against are not a threat to my marriage or your marriage. They're not a threat to our children."

Hear, hear.

The future can't get any worse for the Democrats

I miss my old Democratic friends. Before November, they were a lively bunch, always ready for a debate and firmly convinced that the era of Republicanism was over in America. And I'll give them kudos; they held fast to that belief right up until the end. Around 8 on election night, a delusional Terry McAuliffe, head of the DNC, declared, "This is the best election night in history."

JESSE MANNING

Two days later, the Daily Mirror, a British tabloid, adequately expressed the sentiments of many on the American left with the headline, "How can 59,054,087 people be so DUMB?" And after all the votes were counted, it was a full 62,041,268 who put the Democrats in a miserable state.

And they most certainly are miserable. When the 109th Congress was sworn in on Jan. 4, a handful of Senate Democrats hid behind their desks, outnumbered by a massive Republican majority, the likes of which hadn't been seen for 70 years.

Only their new Golden Boy, Barack Obama, stood as a lanky beacon of hope. Even with no legislative experience on the national level, Obama has been embraced more tightly than John Kerry was after 20 years.

The outlook for the Dems in the House isn't much better. With only minor objections expected, President Bush looks to have his most prosperous years in office. Bush is likely to get his way on nearly everything, from Supreme Court nominees to tort reform.

Not even the "rallying cry" of the post-election Democrats is optimistic. Saying "we still carried 48 percent of the vote, and that's almost a majority" is like someday telling your grandkids how you almost won the war.

I'm certainly no Democrat, but I do like to see healthy opposition to the majority. We should all want such an end: accountability in government and a vigorous minority nipping at the majority's heels so as to keep them in check.

Here is some advice for a Democratic Party still in shock.

PRESENT A UNIFIED FRONT

In 2004, the Democrats unified against one thing: President Bush. That left voters only half-heartedly supporting John Kerry and made too many undecideds uncomfortable with him. Anti-Bush sentiment can't be the major selling point in 2008.

PLAY TO YOUR STRENGTHS

Health care and education are strong issues for Democrats. Simple, repetitive messages work well for Republicans. There's nothing wrong with copying from their playbook. Bill Clinton did it all the time.

BE TOLERANT

Democrats are usually the ones who preach tolerance, but many absolutely fumed with hatred towards Bush voters, evangelical Christians in particular. Case in point: New York Times columnist Maureen Dowd's chastising of Bush voters who had approved a "scary, paranoid, regressive reality" filled with "strains of isolationism, nativism, chauvinism, Puritanism and religious fanaticism."

Obviously, such an evaluation won't get a warm reception among "red staters." Gentle persuasion over time has a better chance of winning over Bush voters than name-calling and condescension.

TRIM THE FAT

The Democrats need to downplay their attraction to Hollywood. Barbara Streisand and Whoopi Goldberg hardly represent a good cross-section of the United States or the party. Allowing them to be spokespeople is quite pretentious and plays rather poorly with the voters. Also, Michael Moore should not be given a seat next to Jimmy Carter at the Democratic National Convention.

Finally, keep your heads up. Elections are only 659 days away. Just because a blind man in a war zone had a better chance than the 2004 Democrats doesn't mean they can't fare better in 2006 and 2008. After all, their situation can't get any worse!

TO THE EDITOR

Faith should not be used for superiority

Dear Editor,

I half applaud the article on the separation of church and state in Friday's paper. However, there is also room for argument with the premises outlined in it.

First, let me say that I am a Christian, and I disagree with the lengths to which judicial activism has sought to remove and restrict the vestiges of those beliefs from the public forum over the last several decades. If President Bush wishes to swear his oath on a Bible, have prayer, and quote Scripture as a part of his inauguration, I believe that is his right – there cannot be a prohibition of his right to the free exercise of his religion, nor a limitation of his speech.

I would propose the same argument for a class valedictorian who wants to acknowledge whatever deity he or she chooses to worship, if any, at a commencement address.

One person acknowledging his or her own personal faith is not an infringement on the rights of any other person to express a different faith, or no faith.

I would disagree with the premise that simply because most of our founding fathers held to a tradition of Christian faith, or that because early records reflect that faith expressed in their words, we must inherently follow that tradition through time immemorial. We are a nation of diverse faiths, and that diversity is increasing as more people from around the world immigrate here.

To hold up one faith over another, whatever its historic importance has been, is the very antithesis of what our founding fathers were seeking to eliminate in the First Amendment and dishonors the people who seek the freedoms our nation has to offer that allows them to practice their own faith traditions.

I suggest a more sensible approach is the tolerant respect for the expression of faith by individuals, whatever faith they might hold – and that we not use any faith as the basis for a presumption of moral superiority over any other person or culture.

Democrats' self-inflicted ignorance creates amusement

By Nicole Asmussen
IOWA STATE DAILY (IOWA STATE U.)

It's funny what things seem to tick off liberals – Donald Rumsfeld not personally signing letters, John Ashcroft reading library records, President Bush saying "nuke-u-ler," Newt Gingrich existing, the United States actually enforcing U.N. resolutions and Christmas.

It's also strange what seems to not upset them.

Whenever I complain about how my professors are liberals, someone always says to me, "Isn't college all about having your opinions challenged?" or "The purpose of a college education is to be exposed to a diversity of viewpoints."

Invariably, this person is also a liberal, yet I have never once heard a liberal lament about having his or her own opinions merely validated and not challenged.

Nor have I ever seen a liberal organize a protest, wave a hand-made sign or burn a class schedule while demanding greater diversity of viewpoints in the classroom.

And this is certainly not because of the abundance of conservative professors at Iowa State.

It is well known that academics tend to lean left. But consider these numbers: Of the 27 ISU political science professors listed on the department's Web page, one is a registered Republican. One. (Let it also be noted that this particular individual is actually a professor in a different department, but he teaches a course that is cross-listed as a political science course.)

True, it is only one department, but it is arguably the department most in need of political diversity and balance.

Some may also argue that not everyone takes a political science course. Every student does take a U.S. diversity course, though. Of the 89 professors listed on the schedule of classes as teaching a U.S. diversity course in fall 2004 or spring 2005, only two are registered Republicans.

The whole point of the U.S. diversity requirement is to make sure that students cannot graduate from Iowa State without having been exposed to diversity. I'm not sure if a liberal student could be exposed to diversity even if he or she tried!

I suppose that my liberal peers could have claimed ignorance up to this point. But now that they know the magnitude of the imbalance, what will they do?

What will they demand of the administration? Affirmative action for Republican faculty? Conservative sensitivity training?

My guess is that they will do nothing. Not because they do not care about diversity.

They most certainly do, but only diversity of the most superficial kind, dealing with gender and race, not genuinely distinct views of human nature and the role of government.

As for having one's opinions challenged, liberals think that only certain opinions ought to be rebuked.

In their minds, the college experience is intended to turn country bumpkins into cosmopolitan sophisticates; born-again creationist fanatics into skeptical Darwinist agnostics; warmongering, resource-gobbling capitalists into peace-loving, tree-hugging activists; and racist, sexist homophobes into tolerant, accepting progressives.

If my liberal peers are content with such a farcical understanding of conservatives, I say fine. Leave them be.

After all, it's not I who is still confused as to how President Bush won re-election. I don't make ridiculously absurd statements like "Republicans want women pregnant, barefoot and in the kitchen," and "They're more afraid of seeing two men kissing than (insert your favorite Bush-induced calamity here)."

I'm perfectly content with my political opposition being ignorant of conservative philosophy and ill-equipped to refute it. The fact that their own ignorance is by and large self-inflicted makes their befuddlement all the more amusing.

And to think it does not upset them in the least.

Track team captures 16 event titles at invitational

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Breanna Eveland soared to new heights once again.

At Saturday's Wildcat Invitational, Eveland set a school record in the pole vault with a jump of 13 – 7-1/2". The mark also set Ahearn Field House as well as meet records and improved her own NCAA Indoor Championships provisional qualifying mark.

"I'm excited," Eveland said. "I think it's about time. I've been jumping well in practice so I'm glad I finally broke (the record)."

Along with her pole vault performance, Eveland set personal bests in three other events en route to her first career collegiate multi-event title in the Wildcat Pentathlon Friday.

The junior, from Grand Rapids, Mich., said her recent success is a byproduct of improved speed and conditioning combined with good coaching.

"If I just keep doing what I'm told to do, I think I'll improve," she said.

Eveland said her goal for the season is to compete in the NCAA Indoor Championships.

"I'd like to get the automatic (qualifying mark), hopefully next meet, so I can get into the NCAAs," she said. "If I get automatic, I can stop worrying and just enjoy the rest of the season."

Eveland contributed to the Wildcats' 16 combined event titles over the weekend.

Other women's winners were freshman middle-distance runner Morgan Bonds, redshirt freshman thrower Laci Heller, and senior jumper Chaytan Hill.

Hill won the long jump with a personal best jump of 19 – 71/2".

She is a four-time NCAA All-American and currently ranked No. 1 in the triple jump by Trackwire. She finished second at the NCAA Indoor Championships last year, and said her goal is to win an NCAA title.

For the K-State men, winners included three juniors – thrower Coby Cost, high jumper Kyle Lancaster and Women take early lead, beat Huskers

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the first 20 minutes of Saturday's game, it looked as if No. 20 K-State was going to cruise to an easy win over the Huskers.

The problem was that someone forgot to tell Nebraska guard Kiera Hardy and the rest of the Huskers.

After K-State led 37-18 at halftime, Nebraska – behind Hardy's five second-half 3-pointers – reduced the Wildcat lead to nine before K-State pulled away for the 74-59 win.

"They are a blue-collar team, they work hard," senior forward Kendra Wecker said of the Huskers. "In the second half, I think we had some lapses defensively."

The win was big for K-State (12-3, 3-1), as Nebraska (11-5, 3-1) came into Manhattan riding a five-game winning streak that included last Wednesday's 103-99 triple-overtime upset over No. 2 Baylor.

K-State avoided being Nebraska's latest victim, as the Wildcats jumped on the Huskers to take a 17-2 lead to start the game.

Head Coach Deb Patterson said she liked the way her team built a big lead early.

"I thought the first half, we played really true to what we're capable of on both ends of the floor," Patterson said.

"We defended extremely well. I thought we were real accountable on the defensive end of the floor – very focused – and brought a great deal of discipline on the offensive end of the floor, which led to good percentage shots and our ability to make our presence known on the offensive boards."

The same cannot be said for the second half.

After holding her to just six points in the first half, the Wildcats allowed Hardy to score 23 points after halftime.

Senior guard Megan Mahoney, who drew the assignment of guarding Hardy, said it was a chore to keep up defensively.

"(Hardy) is a great player, she's so quick," Mahoney said. "When she got hot in the second half, then you have to change things a little bit, you have to get up on her and rely on help defense because she is so explosive."

K-State has now won three straight Big 12 Conference games after dropping its league opener to Iowa State.

During the three wins, the Wildcats have outscored their opponents by an average of 25 points per game.

Sophomore guard Twiggy McIntyre said she feels this Wildcat team is beginning to hit their stride.

"With every game, especially with a big victory like this, you learn and you grow," McIntyre said. "As good as we were in the first half, we can be even better. This is our league - its time to step up and make big plays."

K-State holds Missouri to second lowest scoring total

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State defense had been a concern for head coach Jim Wooldridge – until Saturday.

In their previous two Big 12 Conference games, the Wildcats (11-3, 1-2) gave up 87 points per game, allowed opponents to shoot 51 percent from the field and dug themselves an 0-2 hole to open league play.

Against Missouri (9-7, 1-2), the Wildcats held the Tigers to their second lowest scoring output of the season with 54 points and picked up their first conference win of the season.

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey said it was important for the Wildcats' defense to play well against the Tigers.

"We let Texas Tech score the ball at will, and we felt we had to come out tonight and just clamp down, and I'm happy we could get it done," Massey said.

With its man-to-man and zone defenses, K-State contained Missouri by allowing the Tigers to shoot just 38 percent from the floor and 5-of-26 from beyond the three-point line. By holding the Tigers to 19 percent from behind the arc, the Wildcats are currently ranked fourth in the Big 12 in defensive three-point field goal shooting.

"I thought we played very well defensively," Wooldridge said. "(The defensive effort) was our base that allowed us to make a couple of mistakes offensively, but we weren't giving anything away on the other end."

The Wildcats also out-rebounded the Tigers 41-33 in the win, marking the 10th time this season K-State has out-rebounded an opponent.

Missouri coach Quin Snyder said the Tigers could not match the Wildcats' defensive intensity.

"Not making shots affected our resolve," Snyder said. "When you aren't making

Leinart staying in college is good for the game, builds character

Good for you, Matt Leinart; you resisted the urge.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

You had the willpower to say no to the millions of dollars the National Football League was prepared to throw at you, and you came back to college.

Many thought the idea of coming back was insane, but I think it strengthens the college game and sets a great example.

In case you didn't know, Leinart is two weeks removed from leading the Southern California Trojans to their second straight national championship.

As the USC quarterback, he absolutely ripped apart the Oklahoma Sooners, throwing for 332 yards and five touchdowns in the game, and in the process helped the Trojans become just the second team – Florida State being the other – to go wire-to-wire as the No. 1 team in the nation.

It couldn't get any better for Leinart.

He's at the top of the college football world.

It was almost a lock for him to be the first player taken in April's NFL draft, which would make him an instant multi-millionaire.

So why did he stay?

Because it can get better.

He has the opportunity to do even greater things, and because college is so dang fun.

Imagine being the only college quarterback to lead your team to three straight national championships.

It is all in all possible because the Trojans look even more stacked for next year.

Leinart could potentially go down as the best college quarterback if he could accomplish that feat.

Since he decided to stay in college, the game as a whole is better. I like it when the best players stay in college.

Here at K-State, we have been fortunate enough not to have a lot of players jump to the NFL after their junior seasons.

Sure, there have been some who have seen the green pastures of the NFL and taken the plunge early, but K-State is nothing compared to teams like the Miami Hurricanes who lose young players to the NFL almost every year.

By coming back to college, Leinart is showing other star athletes it's possible to have fun for one more year in college.

Maybe they will follow his lead, maybe they won't.

And sure, by coming back, Leinart is risking an injury that could cost him millions, but sports are supposed to be about the love of the game, not the financial benefits that come with them.

He has already graduated, so he's got a backup plan.

And if he jumped to the NFL, he probably would have gone to the atrocious San Francisco 49ers with expectations of winning immediately pumped into his head.

Who would want that pressure?

So staying in college looks like the best thing, and I, for one, am glad he made that choice.

Hopefully other athletes will follow suit, ensuring college football's place as the best sport in the world.

New Hope offers college students home for contemporary praise service

By Angie Service
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They have found a home on Sunday mornings. Of the 700 worshippers gathering at New Hope Community Church each weekend, over half are college students.

Students are greeted by smiling traffic directors who make sure that the hundreds of cars can fit in the parking lot. Upon entering the school, they see a welcome table with volunteers holding several pamphlets about New Hope.

Chairs are lined up, in the unusual atmosphere of a school gym, around a stage and projector screen. Most people file in wearing jeans and holding a Bible.

At the beginning of the gathering, the band plays contemporary Christian music. Graduate student Justin Ostrander, one of the guitarists in the band, has been attending New Hope for five years.

"I like that the people are real. They don't have to come looking nice.

"They come to see God. I come wearing flip-flops and a t-shirt and no one cares. The bottom line is that the people here are real," Ostrander said.

After the band, a speaker follows with a PowerPoint presentation. Soon after the presentation, a movie clip plays.

The associate pastor, Todd Stewart, speaks about the clip and ethos. He explains that New Hope is a bunch of normal people attending a safe place to gather.

Two members speak about the struggles in their lives. Everyone is asked to gather around a few older members throughout the gymnasium and pray. The band then closes with a few more songs and many members join in, singing and raising their hands.

New Hope was established in 1987 by Bob Anderson, a Christian Challenge leader, with six people in the basement of his house. Senior pastor Dan Stipp attributes the church's growth to its culture of grace and God working in the hearts of people.

Being a contemporary church, New Hope does not follow a traditional format.

"New Hope is different from some traditional churches because we emphasize relationships and being authentic about God and real life," Stipp said.

New Hope offers a variety of additional activities in which to get involved. The activities continue throughout the year.

The church is currently coordinating men's and women's retreats, LIFE gatherings to connect members and HIS, Helping International Students.

Ryan Nutter, junior in business administration, started attending New Hope in the fall and said he has enjoyed his experience.

"I like the leadership, sense of worship, fellowship, preaching and teaching. It's very encouraging," Nutter said.

New Hope has plans for the distant future. The church currently owns land on Scenic Drive and hopes to build meeting place facilities in a couple of years, a change from its current home at Flint Hills Christian School.

"The foundation doesn't change, but New Hope can't stay the same," Stipp said.

Members of New Hope Community Church participate in prayer at the end of service Sunday morning. Church service involved worship and a message followed by a prayer to end the session.

The worship band at New Hope Community Church leads a congregation in worship Sunday morning.

Album a little bit country, little bit rock 'n' roll

"Here For the Party"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

Okay, I'm convinced. I had serious doubts about the quality of Gretchen Wilson's album "Here For the Party," mostly because modern country has a tendency to release and support, at best, mediocre artists, but one listen to this honky-tonk girl's debut album knocked me flat on my cynical critic's ass.

This album is country through and through, mixed with a rock and roll attitude, harkening back to female country legends such as Tanya Tucker and Loretta Lynn up to the more recent Reba McEntire and Shania Twain.

The album opens rowdily with the title track "Here For the Party." It's a song in which Wilson enters a bar and declares that she's "gonna get a little crazy just because I can." The track perfectly complements the now famous "Redneck Woman."

The anthem is a call to arms for being proud of who you are, especially women, such as when Wilson calls for "a big 'hell yeah' from the redneck girls like me."

Wilson allows her influences to shine on the song as names are dropped of both country and rock artists such as Lynyrd Skynyrd, George Strait and Tanya Tucker.

On the song "Homewrecker," Wilson sings a feisty song telling any women that will try to move in on her man: "There's two ways we can do this/You can take it somewhere else/Or we can take it outside." The song drips with a rocking attitude while sung in a perfect country twang. Wilson's album is so enjoyable because her beautifully powerful voice is extremely versatile: she can sing both rollicking anthems as well as beautiful, subdued ballads. An added bonus is how convincing she is at both styles and how well these songs balance each other on the album. "When I Think About Cheatin'," Wilson's third single, is a song to her man about her undying fidelity.

Courtesy art

"When I think about cheatin'/I just think about you leavin'/And how my world would fall to pieces." It is sung with such conviction that the chorus brings tears to the eyes.

The sentimental "Holdin' You" is another wonderful love song. When Wilson sings "holding you holds me together," she sells it with passion to spare. Wilson is an extremely mature and gifted songwriter and no other song shows it more than "The Bed." Wilson narrates a story about a couple whose relationship is deteriorating because of the husband's infidelity.

The most surprising song on the album is "Chariot." Wilson sings about riding a chariot, with a gold eagle on the hood, through heaven. While the song concept sounds ludicrous, the execution erases any doubts. Wilson goes all out on the song adding a choir to supplement her voice and even adding a rap, complete with record scratching, in the middle of the song – and it works stunningly.

Gretchen Wilson's "Here For the Party" is a diverse and fun album that can (and should) be enjoyed by more than just country fans.

No high school Hall of Fame award for Moore

Oscar on the shelf or not, Michael Moore is not getting much respect at his old high school. Despite his fame and many honors, the filmmaker has been rejected all four times that he has been nominated for Davison High School's Hall of Fame.

"Would you want him as a role model? Would you want your son or daughter to be like him?" asked Don Hammond, a member of the Hall of Fame selection committee. "I haven't talked to anybody yet who's for him. The word to describe Michael Moore is embarrassing. He embarrasses everybody."

Moore

Ryan Eashoo disagrees. The 1997 Davison High graduate has spent 80 hours the last two weeks and $600 of his own money trying to get Moore elected.

"We've been blacklisted," Eashoo, 25, told the Detroit Free Press. "I'm a huge Michael Moore fan. He's a great producer, great filmmaker, always sticking up for minorities. He's kind of an underdog."

So far, Eashoo has 300 signed nominations of Moore. His goal is 2,000 by Feb. 1. The committee meets Feb. 11 to choose its inductees.

Moore's film "Fahrenheit 9/11" attacked President Bush's rationale for the war in Iraq and accused him and his administration of fostering fear for political gain. Moore spent the weeks before the election traveling across the country to urge Americans to vote Bush out of office.

Love regains custody

Singer Courtney Love has regained full custody of her 11-year-old daughter, her attorney said. Love, 40, lost custody of Frances Bean Cobain, her daughter with late Nirvana singer Kurt Cobain, in 2003 after she overdosed on painkillers in front of the girl.

The overdose occurred after Love allegedly broke into the home of her ex-boyfriend, music producer Jim Barber.

Her daughter had been staying with Love's stepfather and sister, but Love had daily contact with the girl.

Love

Love regained custody Monday through a judge's ruling, said Love's attorney, Howard Weitzman.

Love, former lead singer of the group Hole, in a statement released by her attorney said: "Life is about choices, and I've chosen to move forward with my life in a healthy and positive way. I am looking forward to the future in continuing to create great music and entertainment. I really appreciate the encouragement and support I've received from my fans and the community."

Insurgents strike across Iraq

8 people killed in suicide car bombing; general warns of election day violence

By Sally Buzbee
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gunmen killed eight Iraqi National Guardsmen Monday at a checkpoint northeast of Baghdad, and eight people died in a suicide car bombing at a police station outside the capital as insurgents struck ahead of national elections.

More than 1 million Iraqi exiles in 14 countries began registering for the upcoming vote.

Also Monday, a suicide car bomber struck a U.S. military convoy in Ramadi, a Sunni insurgent stronghold 70 miles west of Baghdad. There were no reports of casualties, apart from the driver.

Elsewhere in Ramadi, officials Monday found four bodies – three civilians and one Iraqi soldier. They bore handwritten signs declaring them collaborators, a hospital official said.

Although Ramadi has long been a flashpoint for the insurgency, some of the latest violence has occurred in provinces that U.S. and Iraqi authorities have deemed safe enough to hold the Jan. 30 elections.

In a statement Monday, the top U.S. general in Iraq, Gen. George W. Casey, predicted violence on election day but said U.S. and Iraqi authorities would do "everything in our power" to ensure that Iraqis can vote in safety.

Shiite politician Salama Khafaji, who survived an ambush Sunday in central Baghdad by gunmen wearing police uniforms, said she cancelled campaigning in the south after her staff discovered terrorist checkpoints on major routes.

"What we fear now most is terrorists wearing police uniforms," Khafaji told The Associated Press on Monday. "The uniforms and body armor used by the police are available on the market for anyone to buy."

She said the security situation was so bad she had shelved plans to tour mainly Shiite cities in central and southern Iraq starting Monday.

On Monday, exiled Iraqis began registering to vote in their homeland's first independent election in nearly 50 years. Iraqis can vote abroad in 14 countries, including the United States and Britain, and there is a seven-day registration period ending Jan. 23. Voting will begin Jan. 28 and continue until Jan. 30.

U.S. and Iraqi officials have insisted the elections will go ahead as scheduled. Interim President Ghazi al-Yawer said if the elections were postponed for six months, there was no guarantee the violence would wane.

Catholic archbishop abducted Monday in Mosul

By Robert H. Reid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Insurgents kidnapped a Catholic archbishop and targeted security forces in a series of brazen assaults Monday that killed more than 20 people. A suicide bomber attacked U.S. Marines in Ramadi where insurgents also beheaded two Shiite Muslims and left their bodies on a sidewalk.

In Mosul, Archbishop Basile Georges Casmoussa, 66, of the Syrian Catholic Church, was seized by gunmen while walking in front of his church, a priest said on condition of anonymity.

No group claimed responsibility, but the Vatican condemned the abduction as a "terrorist act."

Christians make up just 3 percent of Iraq's 26 million people. The major Christian groups include Chaldean-Assyrians and Armenians with small numbers of Roman Catholics.

The deadliest attacks occurred in three cities in the flashpoint region north and west of Baghdad where Sunni Muslim insurgents are seeking to derail the election.

In Buhriz, 35 miles north of Baghdad, gunmen attacked an Iraqi National Guard checkpoint at the provincial broadcasting center, killing eight soldiers and wounding four. A suicide driver set off a car bomb at a police station in Beiji, 155 miles north of the capital, killing seven policemen and wounding 25 people.

Utah officials end search in avalanche debris; 1 found dead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARK CITY, Utah – Authorities ended a large-scale search in the vast debris field of an avalanche Monday and said a man whose body was found over the weekend was probably the lone victim in Utah.

"Right now, we believe that we have taken the one sole victim out of there," Summit County Sheriff Dave Edmunds said at a news conference.

Initial eyewitness accounts had led authorities to believe as many as five people might have been caught up in Friday's slide near Park City, about 20 miles east of Salt Lake City.

In northern Idaho, meanwhile, two snowboarders from Gonzaga University in Spokane, Wash., were killed in an avalanche while snowboarding south of Mullan, the Shoshone County sheriff's office said.

A third snowboarder, 22-year-old Sean Forbes, survived and walked to a nearby house to call for help, deputies said.

The dead from Sunday's accident were identified as Brian Brett, 23, of Bellingham, Wash., and Pete Tripp, 23, of Bend, Ore.

Freezing rain and avalanche danger Monday hampered efforts to reach the two victims, but a recovery team was able to remove the bodies by early afternoon, the sheriff's office said.

The Friday avalanche in Utah produced a 16-acre field of snow that measured up to 30 feet deep in spots. The body of Shane Maixner, 27, of Sandpoint, Idaho, was recovered Sunday with the help of trained dogs.

Other items of clothing found near the body hinted at the possibility of more victims. But Edmunds pulled back from that on Monday, saying it's common during rescue efforts to find incidental items in the debris.

"There's been four solid days and there's just no reason to believe that there's more victims out there," Edmunds said.

Monday was the last day searchers would gather in large numbers at the site because fatigue was setting in, Edmunds said.

A limited search will continue, but bigger groups won't scale the mountain again without credible evidence that others are missing.

The slide occurred in an out-of-bounds area near The Canyons resort that had been marked with skull and crossbones warning signs because of the avalanche danger.

Including Maixner, seven people have been killed in Utah avalanches so far this winter – more than any other year since the state started keeping records in 1951.

"I would love to be at the competition and participate in the enjoyment when they receive their ribbons.

"I know that is what I would want somebody to do for me."

Debbi DeVenuto, northeast area director for Special Olympics, said those who helped make the awards directly affected the athletes.

"For each ribbon they make, we save 25 cents," she said.

"By doing this, we don't have to ask the community to pay for them."

She said helping the community was a great way to commemorate the man behind the holiday.

"Martin Luther King Jr. was a wonderful man who believed in equality for all," she said.

Steve Jones, junior in public relations, and Araceli Hernandez, junior in secondary education, help tie ribbons for the Special Olympics of Northeast Kansas. The awards will go to the athletes, and will not have to be paid for by the community. Each ribbon made saved the organization 25 cents. Jones said he volunteered because he wanted to be a help to Special Olympic children and was interested in continuing as a volunteer.

FLU | Restrictions lifted on vaccine after low demand

Manhattan yet. Lafene has only seen two flu cases all semester, he said.

When the flu epidemic does arrive, there are usually many cases within a period of several weeks, Reppert said.

The epidemic generally starts on the East Coast and makes its way across the country.

Because flu season lasts through the end of February, Reppert said it is possible that Kansas could experience an epidemic before the end of the season.

Murphy said the level of flu activity has been increasing over the last three weeks, although he said he was unsure if it had reached its peak.

Since restrictions on the vaccine were lifted on Thursday, Murphy said the health department has seen an increase in demand for the vaccine.

Reppert said many people have misconceptions about the flu vaccine.

"The vaccines protect against the fever, cough, chills, body ache and headache," he said.

"It usually doesn't protect against the nausea, vomiting and diarrhea."

Flu vaccinations should be updated yearly, Reppert said.

"The influenza virus is able to change itself slightly every year enough so the immunity you got the year before you are generally not protected against," he said.

GPA or higher, and to be on UGB, students need a 2.5 GPA or higher.

After candidates have filed, there is a mandatory information meeting at 4 p.m. on Feb. 21 or 22 in the Little Theatre.

Hayley Urkevich, student body president, said the meeting will cover election regulations and allow candidates to ask questions.

Candidates will begin posting signs and other campaign materials across campus on Feb. 22.

Then candidates must include complete expense reports for their campaigns before the elections.

The primary election, which will be held if there are more than two presidential candidates, will begin at 8 a.m. on March 1 and end at 6 p.m. on March 2.

The general election will begin and end at the same times on March 8 and 9.

Anyone enrolled in at least one hour at K-State is eligible to vote.

McCandless encouraged students to pay attention to the elections because SGA handles many issues that affect students – including the use of student privilege fees.

"These are the people who are going to represent you for the next year," McCandless said.

mid-distance runner Christian Smith.

Lancaster won the high jump with a leap of 7 – 2-1/2" to improve his NCAA provisional qualifying mark.

The three-time NCAA All-American has been limited this season due to a stress fracture he suffered in the fall.

However, Lancaster said he was happy with his performance.

"I've got a ways to go, but considering my condition, I'm happy where I'm at," he said.

Like Lancaster, Smith has also been plagued by injuries.

He won the 800-meter run over the weekend in his first race of the season with a time of 1:50.53.

Smith said the key to his season is to stay healthy.

"I think if I can stay healthy and able to train, I'm sure I'll be able to make a lot of improvements and everything will come from there," he said.

Head coach Cliff Rovelto said he was generally pleased with his team's performance.

"I really look more at the performances and where they relate in terms of what it is going to take to score at the conference meet, so how we place in meets like this is really misleading," Rovelto said.

"I think right now, on paper, our men probably have a little stronger conference team than do the women, which obviously is a little different than it's been historically here."

Next action for the Wildcats is Saturday at the K-State-Kansas-Missouri Triangular in Ahearn Field House.

shots, you have to dig in defensively and we didn't have the same defensive tenacity."

Along with shutting down the Tigers as a team, the Wildcats were able to build an 11 – point lead at halftime by holding Missouri's leading scorer, sophomore forward Linas Kleiza, to four points on 2-of-6 shooting in the first half.

Kleiza finished just 5-of-16 from the floor for the game.

"He's a real strong guy and a skilled basketball player, but coach told us he can get out of control sometimes and that is pretty much what we keyed in on and hoped for," Massey said.

Wooldridge said the Wildcat's defensive effort was the best he had seen in several games.

"I think we had a good sturdy look about us defensively throughout the night," Wooldridge said.

"We made very few mistakes on that end.

"So in that sense I thought we played a much better game tonight than we have played in the last two or three games."

Family, friends remember student's smile, love

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lee Spence is starting to realize the way his daughter touched so many lives.

Lee's daughter, Dixie, senior in apparel marketing and design, was killed in a car accident Monday. The community and university support has shown a grieving father the legacy his daughter left behind.

"Dixie was full of life. It seemed like whenever she walked in a room a big light came on," he said.

"She always had a smile on her face. People knew Dixie was there. She touched a lot of lives and loved a lot of people. We are now beginning to realize how much love there was in her life."

Spence, 22, was killed when she pulled out in front of a pickup truck at 11:45 a.m. Monday, two miles north of Hutchinson, Kan.

Spence died at the Hutchinson Hospital at 12:45 p.m. Monday.

The driver of the pickup, John Lenherr, 15, was not injured.

Randy Henderson, Reno County sheriff, said there have been three fatalities in four years at the same intersection.

Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco said his office is providing counseling and pastoral support to Kappa Alpha Theta, Dixie's sorority, as well as to roommates and friends.

"This is a tremendous tragedy and loss," he said.

"Our hearts go out to Dixie's family and friends."

Dixie had traveled to Virginia to find an apartment with her fiance and came home to Hutchinson this weekend to show her parents a video of her future home.

Dixie and her fiance, K-State graduate Matt Lewis, planned a June wedding.

Dixie worked at American Eagle in Manhattan Town Center and was hoping to get a job at the store after moving to the East Coast where her fiance had a job at Johnson & Johnson Company.

"She wanted to stay in apparel," Lee Spence said. "She loved clothes.

"She grew up in clothes in 4-H, and that's what she really wanted to do."

While the support from K-State administration and friends has been overwhelming, Lee Spence just misses that smiling face.

"I wish they could bring my daughter back home," he said.

"We'll just take it one day at a time."

Fast facts

Memorial dates

- Family and friends will celebrate Dixie Spence's life at 2 p.m. Thursday at the Trinity United Methodist Church in Hutchinson followed by a burial at McPherson Cemetary.
- A campus memorial will be scheduled for next week. Students interested in participating can contact the Office of Student Life at 532-6432.

City adds campus lighting, Denison turn lane

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Campus will soon be safer for students after dark.

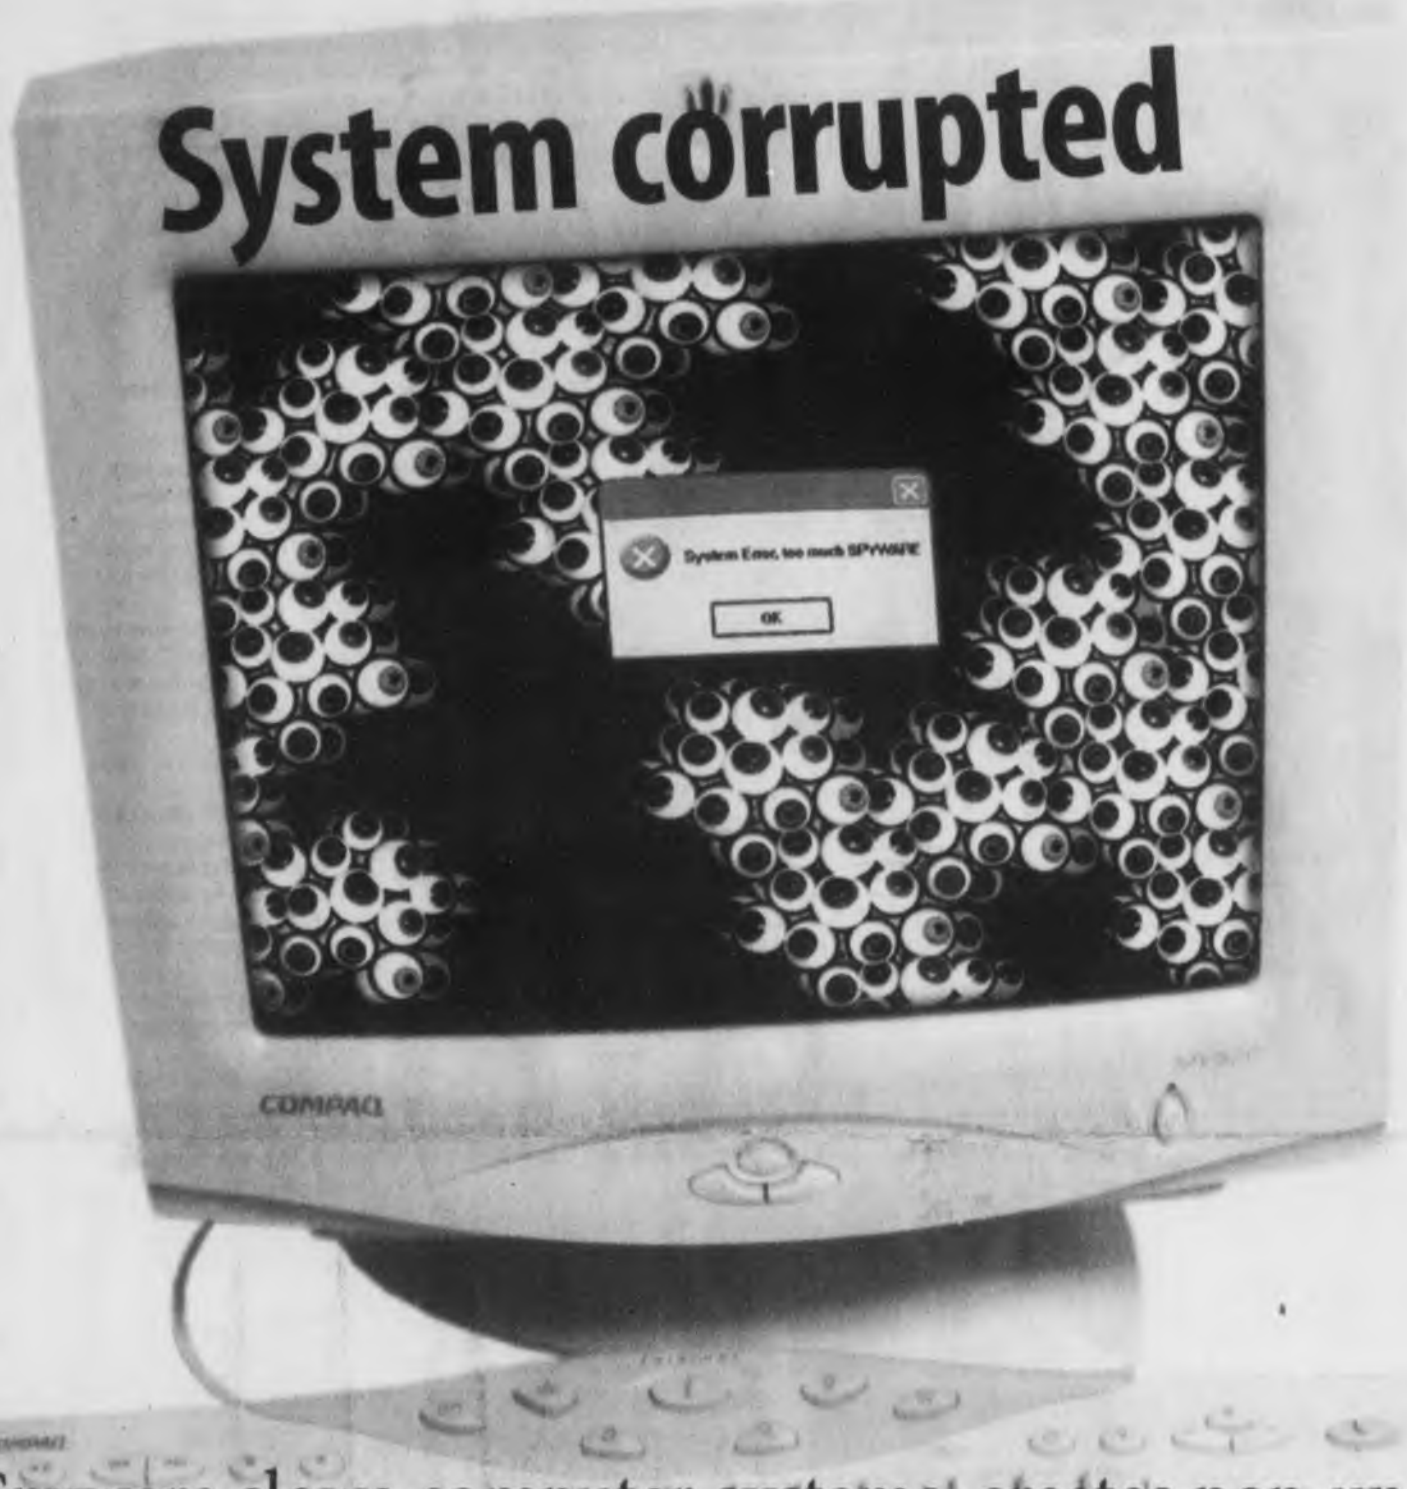
The City Commission approved funding Tuesday for several projects aimed at improving K-State, including installing better lighting on campus at a cost of $119,500.

A committee composed of both city and university representatives recommended five projects.

The agenda will include purchasing containers for a recycling project, constructing a walkway at University Gardens and giving funding to SafeRide. They will also widen Denison Avenue from Elaine Drive north to Kimball Avenue, in order to make a three-lane section.

Assistant City Manager Diane Stoddard said ideas for these projects come from both the city and the university, but most suggestions come from Student Senate.

The committee will continue to work with the city throughout the year as they develop their plans, she said.



"We meet with the city staff every month, so we depend on them quite a bit," Stoddard said.

The commission voted 5-0 to give funding to the committee.

Commissioners discussed a new development at the southwest corner of Kimball Avenue and North Manhattan Avenue called the Gardens at Flint Hills, which is city land.

Spyware slows computer systems, creates pop-ups

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It can happen when it's least expected.

Spyware – commonly mistaken for a virus – invades a computer and causes it to run slowly, creates more ads pop up, resets the browser's homepage and tracks the Web sites a user visits.

INFECTION

There are several ways a computer can become infected with spyware, even if the owner is an average person who uses the computer for homework and the Internet, said Tim Ramsey, information technology security coordinator for Computing and Networking Services.

A person can get spyware just by visiting the wrong Web site, he said.

"There are Web sites out their that, without your knowledge or permission, send you spyware," Ramsey said.

Spyware can also be obtained by downloading software from a Web site, he said.

"If you download software from the network and they say, hey it's free, the reason it's free is that they bundle spyware with it," Ramsey said.

Movie theater to add stadium seating, digital sound system

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Moviegoers will soon be more comfortable after Seth Childs Cinema adds stadium seating.

Renovations to the theaters began Monday and Judy Russell, director of investor and public relations for Carmike Cinemas, with which Seth Childs is affiliated, said they hope to have the renovations completed by late spring.

The renovation, which shut six auditoriums on Sunday night, will update the facade and lobby area, as well as add stadium seating and digital audio to the older theaters, she said. Six auditoriums already have stadium seating and digital sound.

"We just appreciate patience in our customers," Russell said.

Brandon Dowello, senior in mass communications, said the improvements are needed.

Some students said other improvements could be made to the theaters.

Megan Reese, junior in communication science and disorders, said she would like to see credit be allowed as a form of payment.

Kathleen O'Brien, senior in marketing, said she would like lower ticket prices.

However, Dowello said some prices in the theater are reasonable.

"I like the prices at the concession stand," he said.

Reese said besides going to the movies, there are other features she likes about Seth Childs.

"The arcade section is really popular," she said.

Iraqi candidates killed

A suicide bomber struck the Baghdad headquarters of Iraq's biggest Shiite political party Tuesday, killing three, as the government announced plans to close borders and restrict movements to bolster security in the national election. Three candidates were slain.

Rice questioned

Secretary of State nominee Condoleezza Rice told senators on Tuesday that a U.S. exit strategy from Iraq depends on that country's ability to defend itself against terrorists after this month's elections. Rice vowed to work with allies to ease ties that have been frayed by U.S. policy.

Abbas travels to Gaza

In the biggest test of his brief tenure, Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas came to the Gaza Strip Tuesday, hoping to persuade militants to halt attacks on Israel. In a show of defiance, a Palestinian suicide bomber blew himself up on a settler road in Gaza, wounding six Israelis.

CAMPUS CHRONICLES

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

Hollywood nerds embrace stigma

LOS ANGELES – In their quest to recruit new members this fall, the Bruin Nerds arrived at orientation toting artist and engineer Chuck Hoberman's classic invention – the plastic geodesic expanding sphere.

Organizers say that for a club started less than a year ago, Bruin Nerds has grown quickly.

More than 300 people have joined with an average of six to eight signing up online each week, said Ryan Gerard, a fifth-year computer science and engineering student and one of the group's founders.

He came up with the idea for Bruin Nerds while studying in Singapore last year, and told three of his closest friends, who agreed to help him start it up.

The club has no specific focus, but the perks are many, he said.

Because organizers contact members ahead of time about events, those who RSVP often have access to discounted rates on group activities that range from viewing "The Little Shop of Horrors" to gathering on Sunset Boulevard last summer to protest a Paris Hilton book signing.

Sitting in a cafe in Westwood late in 2004, Gerard and fourth-year mathematics student Marty Flores recount their qualms with the socialite.

"Her eyes are not actually blue – she wears colored contacts," Flores said.

"And I'm mad because she never calls me," Gerard chimes in.

Along with a third friend, fifth-year engineering student Ryan Dean, the three banter steadily, finishing each other's sentences and laughing at old jokes.

They say the club is a reflection of how far they've come since high school, when they felt humiliated by peers who called them nerds.

Now, they say they've gotten over the stigma and embraced their interests, which include everything from the "Rocky Horror Picture Show" and "Hedwig and the Angry Inch" to the Los Angeles County Museum of Art and UCLA's Japanese Tea Garden.

They visited Marilyn Monroe's grave Thursday afternoon, and are planning an "Angry Valentines" party for February, complete with broken heart cookies and 1980s love ballads.

SELLING SEX TO FRESHMEN

LINCOLN, Neb. – Forget course catalogs and colorful pamphlets.

Think sex, skiing and rock 'n roll.

When it comes to recruiting students for college, admissions officials are turning to more outlandish stunts than ever to get the attention of high schoolers in this age of the Internet.

Birthday cards, ski weekends and even reality TV shows are being used by colleges and universities to get an edge.

"Everybody's trying to do something that isn't the mundane," said Dan Kunzman, vice president of admissions at Doane College in Crete in southeast Nebraska.

But not all of the gimmicks are received with open arms.

After the University of Nebraska-Lincoln agreed to let Motley Crue drummer Tommy Lee film his reality show, "Tommy Lee Goes to College," on campus, protests were lodged by some faculty members.

The show is tentatively scheduled to air this summer.

And Doane College officials apologized after receiving complaints about recruiting postcards that showed a male student surrounded by women, encouraging students to "play the field."

Moore, Wagner first presidential ticket to file

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

Tyson Moore (left), junior in information systems, and Matt Wagner (right), sophomore in management information systems, have filed for student body president and vice president, respectively, in the Student Governing Association election in March.

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Election season has begun a bit earlier than usual. The first pair of candidates has announced their intentions to run.

Tyson Moore, junior in information systems, and Matt Wagner, sophomore in management information systems, said they are ready to make the changes K-State students want to see.

"We feel this is the best way to make a difference for K-State students and to affect the students in a positive way," Moore said.

Moore, Student Senate vice chair, and Wagner, Senate governmental relations chair, will run a three-point campaign.

With a slogan of "Get Moore," the pair is focusing on giving students more for their money, more options and more accountability.

Moore said one of their main issues will be tuition stabilization, falling under the category of giving students more for their money.

"Last year the president and vice president promised to keep increases below 10 percent," Moore said, "and that's what we promise to maintain."

Another issue is the problematic parking at K-State. Wagner said the best solution to this situation would be the addition of a parking garage, which would add 1,000 parking spaces to campus.

Wagner said he and Moore felt they could speed up progress on current efforts to solve the issue and still minimize the cost to students.

ELECTIONS 2005

The election filing deadline for Student Governing Association positions is 4 p.m. Feb. 18.

As for giving students more options, the pair say they want to implement an online teacher evaluation program, which will give students a way to compare professors.

"Students really need a way to look at the different professors for a course so they can pick the professor that's best suited to their learning style," Moore said.

The pair also wants better health insurance for graduate students that would include more benefits and less cost.

Currently, teaching assistants receive the same amount of insurance as undergraduate students.

The promise of constant communication and solving students' problems are the main issues under the more accountability category. Moore said if elected, he and Wagner will meet with two student organizations every week to maintain constant communication with students and to ensure all concerns are heard.

The pair said they plan on using their experience working with the administration, the Kansas State Board of Regents and the legislature in order to get changes made.

Wagner said one reason for running is to get students' voices heard, not only at K-State and on the K-State campus, but in the Manhattan community and the realm of higher education in the state of Kansas.

For now, the pair's campaign plans are just to get their message out to students, eventually followed by the traditional T-shirts, posters and sidewalk chalk.

Moore said they want to get the word out on why he and Wagner are the students that need to be elected.

"We feel we really have what it takes to address the students' issues effectively," Moore said.

Students to attempt record

Salina students involved with fueling, forecast

By Jeremy Dautenhahn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Twelve K-State-Salina students have been selected to participate in an attempt to fly around the world without refueling, a feat that has never been accomplished.

The students will be part of the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer mission control team.

The event will be held at the Salina Airport and the mission control base will be located on the K-State-Salina campus.

Seth Short, senior in aviation, said he was honored to be a part of the record attempt.

"This is something that so few people get to be a part of and it's almost inconceivable to myself that I get to be one of the lucky few," he said.

The event has received world-wide coverage, which is important for the university, said Andrew Smith, assistant professor in aviation.

"This involves Kansas State University on an international level with aviation and non-aviation people watching as this monumental attempt unfolds with energized, high-technology excitement right here in Salina, Kan.," he said.

The 12 students selected for the team will assist with weather forecasting, moving equipment from the hangar, fueling and weight or balance issues.

They will also support crowd control and communication with the Federal Aviation Administration during the flight.

These students were chosen based on their professionalism and their ability to portray the college in a positive light. Their class and lab performance were also taken into account as well as their FAA certification levels.

This event will help build a strong national reputation for the K-State College of Technology and Aviation and gives K-State a chance to contribute to aviation history.

Marlon Johnson, head of K-State aviation, said, "It also will introduce our program to a whole new group of people outside the aviation community.

"Whenever someone does an Internet search on 'GlobalFlyer,' they're also going to get an introduction to K-State at Salina and our aviation program."

GlobalFlyer

K-State-Salina will sponsor an attempt by a GlobalFlyer airplane pilot to fly solo around the world without refueling.

TO THE POINT

Course variety policy needs to be reviewed after trial period

As a Division I school, K-State needs to provide a variety of courses, but sometimes this doesn't happen.

Problems have occurred with the lack of alternative upper-level general education courses, and students have complained.

Faculty Senate took action by passing a policy that will allow colleges to specify which courses will fulfill general education requirements for each major.

Flexibility was left to the colleges as to if and how to expand students' options.

The new policy will allow for courses that are considered specific to each major to be considered for upper-level general education requirements.

These actions will help diversify course options for students, but there could be problems.

Courses may fill up too quickly, and majors may not be able to get into courses they need to graduate.

It could also put added pressure on instructors with larger classes.

Still, this policy should be given a chance to see whether or not it works.

We ask Faculty Senate to re-evaluate this policy after a year to see if it causes more problems than it solves.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Seize the opportunity

K-State students should continue volunteering tradition

JULIA STOSKOPF

Six hundred fifty thousand hours. No, that's not the number of credit hours required for Van Wilder to graduate, instead, it represents the volunteer hours the Bank of America Corporation's employees logged in 2004, according to the Dec. 29, 2004 Boston Globe.

K-State celebrated the Martin Luther King Jr. Day of Service on Monday, and K-State students participated in volunteer activities to celebrate the life of a legend. Today, however, is Jan. 19, and just as the legacy of Dr. King lives on, so should K-State's commitment to community service.

Volunteering is a K-State tradition. According to Community Service Program Director Carol Gould, in the March 22 K-State Webzine, more than 25 percent of K-State students are involved in some form of community service.

K-State is not alone. Even the Republican Party has carried the torch of community service. The Sept. 1 Port St. Lucie/Fort Pierce Tribune described the Republican National Convention theme of "compassionate conservatism" and, according to one young volunteer, Bradley Thomas, "You look at what you have in your hometown and wish you could give them everything you have."

Community service does not require a lot of time, but it should be extended past the Christmas spirit or a forgotten New Year's resolution. Make an effort to participate in campus-wide community service events. One-quarter of the students on campus may have been involved in the past, but make an effort to raise that number even more.

No one argues that volunteering and community service are not important to every aspect of a community, but now it may even affect your job – not working at KSU Parking Services – the one after you graduate.

The above mentioned Boston Globe described the FleetBoston Financial Corporation that requires employees to log their volunteer hours into a computer – and similar such programs are now using such electronic records to influence job promotions.

In defense of the policy, Anita Allen, executive director of BearingPoint's corporate giving, told the Boston Globe, "You can go over the line if you're pushing employees to volunteer on their own time. We're trying to support employees engaged in the community rather than forcing our employees to be out there."

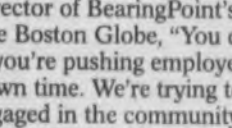
Regardless of its reflection on a resume, volunteering should be supported and upheld by every student.

For those students who spend more time in the lab than at home, don't worry – community service does not have to require a large time commitment.

Instead, K-State's Community Service Program can find the perfect match for any time commitment or interest. If it can't, try community organizations – like the Flint Hills Breadbasket, the American Red Cross or even Sunset Zoo.

Contributing to the community is a win-win situation. Go donate some plasma, some blood or just some time to a worthwhile cause. Anything imaginable qualifies – from Christmas caroling at a nursing home in December to reading a book to an elementary school student once a week.

If these activities still are too strenuous, just help others to help the community. Pick up a cupcake at a local bake sale, buy a package of cookies from a Girl Scout or take your ride to a car wash. Chances are good that these organizations will use some – if not all – of those funds to support their own worthwhile programs or volunteer activities.



Whether you donate time or money to boost an ego, a warm-fuzzy feeling or a future paycheck, volunteering is always a good idea. Seize the opportunity to make another person's life better – you may just find you've improved your own as well.

Instead of assuming, find out about other cultures

DAVID LIANG

If your average foreigner had to picture a map of the United States in his head, there would probably only be four states: New York, California, Florida and Texas.

The remaining territories would collectively be marked "here be dragons" in a really archaic font.

As far as we're concerned, they're just sparsely-populated wilderness home to marauding Indians and maybe a few armadillos. Backwater names like "Kansas" tend to conjure images of cowboys riding off towards the desert sunset screaming "Yee haw."

This is outrageous, I hear you cry. How can anyone possibly be so ill-informed about America? The sad truth is that you are absolutely right. For most of the outside world, our preconceptions of this country are largely shaped by Hollywood and MTV.

This means that what little we see or hear of the land of the free comes straight from the movies and pop music. Action movies set in L.A. and annoying rap lyrics about the "homies" in the "ghettos" bragging about "slapping their bitches" tend to stick in your head for a while.

At first, I felt a little guilty but I soon realized that the ignorance was mutual. A lot of Kansans, evidently, hold rather simplistic, one-dimensional views of the world full of cultural and demographic stereotypes themselves. It goes something like this:

"White people with cool accents come from England, where a quaint and powerful old lady called the queen lives. White people with not-quite-as-cool accents come from somewhere to the general direction of the east; brown people with funny hats come from Mexico, and yellow-skinned people, of course, come from China, where people spend their days bowing to each other and eating with chopsticks when not practicing Kung-fu. China, by the way, is somewhere in the Far East which is just off the coast of Pluto."

As it turned out, my first encounter with a Kansan who had actually heard of my home country was also less than flattering.

"Singapore? Isn't that where they throw you in jail and whip you for chewing gum?" my friend asked.

"No," I replied. "That's for littering. Chewing gum warrants decapitation. After which, your head is stuck on a pike in the neighborhood to deter future criminals."

Delighted with my powers of improvisation, I thought I had made a pretty witty retort until my friend's flabbergasted look told me he thought I was dead serious. We stood there staring at each other for a while. Assumption had made fools out of both of us.

It's been my experience that local and foreign students don't interact very much. Really, it doesn't take a philosopher to tell you the obvious benefits of getting to know your international friends better. Besides broadening your horizons, knowledge of other cultures can come in handy in the future if you encounter foreigners in your workplace.

If you're an undergraduate, you've most probably had a foreign teaching assistants at some point. Go up and talk to them. Ask them about where they're from and their ways of life.

Attend international festivals and cultural events sponsored by various international student groups. Most of us will be happy to share our experiences.

Ditto for the international students. Go out and mingle with Americans, explore Kansas, go to a barn party or, if you're adventurous, the Country Stampede.

Most of you are here for an education, which entails not only academics but getting to know the land you're in.

I don't have anything to say to the Fourum today.

I'm just sickened by the people of Kansas.

To the nerd that said watching the extended versions back to back to back of the Lord of the Rings is a bad thing, I watched it twice this weekend. Thank you, I am the bigger nerd.

K-State gets relief from snow, ice as temperatures rise

Maintenance workers work to clear ice, sand

By Annie M. Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The ice might be melting, but maintenance crews aren't getting a holiday from the hard work brought on by winter storms.

Director of Facilities Services John Woods said crews are working hard at sweeping the sand off the walkways, so students don't track it into the buildings.

Woods said the hardest job is clearing the ice from entryways.

"Typically they come to work at 6 a.m. to remove the ice before a majority of people arrive," he said.

While no new crew members were hired, existing employees did spend more hours working over-time, Assistant Director of Facilities Maintenance Mark Loberg said.

The winter storms are over for now and Loberg said the warmer weather will allow the crews to go back to building maintenance.

"Clearing the ice and snow from the roads becomes top priority," he said. "After the roads are cleared, there is still work to do around campus."

The bad weather was not worse than expected, Loberg said.

"We usually see three or four icing events a year," he said. "This year we've only seen one really heavy storm."

Watching the weather is crucial to road preparation crews, Loberg said.

"They are out there before storms hit to pre-treat the roads," he said. "Some crews work overnight shifts to make roads safe to travel on."

While maintenance crews watch the weather, Associate Director of Utilities Maintenance Dale Boggs watches the gas market to maintain the cost of heating the buildings.

Ice a hazard for drivers

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Freezing rains, low temperatures, and icy roads last week presented bad driving conditions at the beginning of this semester.

The harsh winter weather conditions left some students with traveling dilemmas.

Peyton Dallam, sophomore in elementary education, was driving from Kansas City to Manhattan last Monday Jan. 10, when she hit a patch of ice on I-70.

"I was driving past the mile 23 marker when I slid on a patch of ice, over-corrected, and rolled my car over twice," she said.

Dallam was wearing her seatbelt and was not injured, but her car was completely totaled. She said the experience taught her a lesson.

"I learned that I shouldn't have been driving in that kind of weather," Dallam said. "I'm always going to have to drive cautious in bad weather."

While roads on the interstate are now clear, there are still patches of ice covering some Manhattan streets.

Kristina Kleinsasser, sophomore in animal science, drove back to Manhattan from her home in Huron, South Dakota.

She said she didn't encounter problems on her trip to Manhattan, but found the streets within Manhattan covered with ice, especially her street, Pomeroy.

"My street was dangerously icy when I cam back, and is still covered with some ice," Kleinasser said.

City Commissioner Bruce Snead said city officials and maintenance workers tried to clear the streets quickly.

"There is little you can do when you have a solid sheet of ice and low freezing temperatures," he said. "The snowplow doesn't work on ice, and at low temperatures salt is no longer effective in melting the ice."

According to the National Weather Service in Topeka, weather advisories lasted from Jan. 10 until Jan. 12 and below freezing temperatures continued until Monday.

K-State Research and Extension Climatologist, Mary Knapp, said the weather experienced was abnormal in some ways.

"It's not odd that we had the accumulation of bad weather conditions, but it's unusual that they continued so many days in a row, she said.

"Continuous low temperatures can make treacherous conditions."

Coffman Commons lacks funds needed for construction's start

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Funds may not be available anytime soon for building Coffman Commons, an outdoor courtyard in honor of former K-State Provost James Coffman.

The plan is to build Coffman Commons in front of the entrance to the library, where Denison Hall used to be. Denison Hall was demolished in summer 2004.

"It's in our campus master plan to put in a pond and a bridge that connects up with the sidewalks," said Gerald Carter, director of facility planning and university architect.

There is no timeline on the construction of the Commons because over $750,000 must be raised for it to be built.

The project will be privately funded by donations, and the university is in the process of fundraising. Carter did not have an estimate of how much has already been raised, but said they still have a long way to go.

"When we're doing things on a private basis. Sometimes it takes us awhile to get those things to occur," he said.

Jana Fallin, division chair of music education, said the Commons would not only honor Coffman but would also recognize excellent teachers. The bridge would have plaques to honor professors who have been recognized as outstanding teachers.

"Good teachers help build bridges in their curriculum so students care and effectively learn," Fallin said.

"We want the students to learn, and we want the teachers to help them learn."

The pond will be new to K-State because there is currently no water on campus other than fountains. Water has a calming effect, and as it moves, it symbolizes the growth K-State students go through, Fallin said.

"Water symbolizes movement, purity and growth," she said.

The additional cost for the maintenance of a water feature is going to be paid for through private endowments, both included in the $750,000 estimate and in additional funds the university plans to raise, so it will not be paid for through K-State's general maintenance fees.

Coffman was the provost until he retired from the position last spring, said Tom Rawson, vice-president of administration and finance for K-State. Before he was the provost, Coffman was the dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

"What an incredible man. Brilliant, caring, thoughtful," Fallin said. "He's a really good teacher."

Fallin said the Commons will greatly benefit students and said he hopes they help with the fundraising.

"It is such a perfect spot for students to be able to sit for awhile," she said.

"We would love for organizations to get behind it and help raise money."

Freshman equals Wildcat success

ANTHONY MENDOZA

It was the gutsiest move that women's basketball coach Deb Patterson has made this season, but it was the right one.

The only answer to its success is six wins and zero losses.

That equation equals the number of wins and losses K-State has when freshman Shana Wheeler starts for the Wildcats in place of senior Brie Madden.

The first freshman to start in a Big 12 Conference game for the Wildcats since the 2001-02 season, Wheeler has continuously improved and it wasn't any more evident than in Saturday's win over a streaking Nebraska team, which had won five straight games.

Wheeler scored K-State's first two points of the game and sealed the game in the end.

She made 5-of-7 free throws in the final minutes of the game to help move the Wildcats' home conference winning streak to 20 games and pick up their third straight win in Big 12 play.

Offense is not what the Wildcats need out of her though – that's just an extra.

With the conference's overall leading scorer in Kendra Wecker, the outside shot of Laurie Koehn and the overall play of Megan Mahoney, there are not enough balls to go around.

Wheeler needs to just play her role, and that is what she does.

A 6-foot-2 center from Lee's Summit, Mo., she can play any position on the floor defensively.

Saturday night, she did.

She banged in the paint and pulled down a career high 11 rebounds–six were offensive, a career best.

Wheeler displayed her quickness going from the block to the baseline to block a three-point attempt.

Anytime you hear the words, "that reminded me of (Nicole) Ohlde" mentioned along with your name, as teammate Wecker did after the game about the play Wheeler made, you know you're something special.

Let's not forget the play toward the end of the game when the Huskers had the momentum.

Wheeler found herself out at the top of the key covering the point guard.

She not only stayed with her step-for-step and forced a bad shot, but also ripped down the defensive rebound.

Wheeler is raw, a tall and slim player who at times looks lost on the court, but makes up for it in athletic ability.

Kind of like Dennis Rodman minus the tattoos, piercings and many different colors of hair.

Her moves in the post are average, the shot is still a bit flat, but the experience that Wheeler is getting this season will only benefit the K-State women's program.

Coach Patterson's present-day move to put the freshman in the spotlight - and play the senior Madden in the reserve role– was the best move for this season, and the seasons ahead.

Spring in their step

Senior, frosh lead Wildcats

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a fall season in which records were chased and a new star appeared, the K-State women's tennis team begins its spring season with a sense of accomplishment.

After posting outstanding fall seasons, senior Maria Rosenberg and freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia will lead the Wildcats this spring.

Rosenberg, ranked No. 7 in the Central Region, enters the spring just nine wins short of K-State's all-time career singles win record that currently stands at 77.

Kvaratskhelia – also ranked in the Central Region at No. 9 – finished the fall season with the most wins ever by a K-State freshman, with a record of 15-2.

Head coach Steve Bietau said he was happy with the effort of the team this past fall.

"That would certainly be one of our goals — to get back in the top half of the conference."

Steve Bietau
HEAD COACH

"I was pleased with the fall in the sense that we got a lot done," he said. "There are a lot of people making progress and getting a lot better."

When asked what the career wins record would mean to her, Rosenberg said she hadn't paid much attention to it until this year.

Men's team takes break to heal after 1st conference win

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This could have been a long week for the K-State men's basketball team.

Facing an extended break and the possibility of an 0-3 Big 12 Conference start, the Wildcats picked up a much-needed 74-54 win over Missouri Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum Saturday.

After losing in double-overtime at Nebraska and by three to Texas Tech at home to open league play, Coach Jim Wooldridge said the win was a shot in the arm.

"It helps the spirit of our team as much as anything," Wooldridge said, "that they tasted success against a good basketball team and that they can continue to work, and if they continue to work, they'll have more success."

Sophomore forward Cartier Martin, who led the Wildcats with 18 points and 10 rebounds against the Tigers, agreed.

"It feels really good bouncing back from two losses," Martin said. "Getting this win really boosts our confidence a lot."

Today is the only time K-State (11-3, 1-2) will not play a midweek game in Big 12 Conference play.

Though some might think a week off would be the last thing a team would want while riding a wave of momentum, Wooldridge said this is not the case.

Forced to deal with a rash of injuries of late – senior forward Jeremiah Massey (ankle), junior guard Schyler Thomas (ankle), sophomore guard Fred Peete (back) and freshman point guard Clent Stewart (neck and back) – Wooldridge said the time off will be beneficial for the Wildcats.

"With the condition we're physically in, it's probably a good time for us," Wooldridge said.

Despite several Wildcats playing at less than full strength, K-State was able to put together one of its strongest defensive efforts of the year against the Tigers.

The Wildcats drew several charges, out-rebounded the Tigers 41-33 and held Missouri to 38 percent shooting on Saturday.

"I was real proud of their effort," Wooldridge said. "We were on the floor for loose balls, and we took several charges or attempted to take several charges."

Wildcats not looking past surprise Texas A&M Aggies

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State may have won three straight Big 12 Conference games and eight out of its last nine overall, but the Wildcats are not looking ahead to Saturday.

The match up with No. 10 Texas Tech will have to wait, because No. 20 K-State (12-3, 3-1) will have to deal with an athletic Texas A&M Aggie (11-3, 2-2) team at 7 p.m. Wednesday.

A&M is coming off a two-point win over the Kansas Jayhawks on Saturday and back-to-back conference wins for the first time in three years.

Coach Deb Patterson said her team is focused on the Aggies and not looking ahead to Saturday.

"I think we're incredibly focused," Patterson said. "We understand we came off a second half (against Nebraska) which we weren't as sharp as we needed to be in Big 12 play, so I don't even think that's a thought. "Texas A&M is incredibly athletic, they are playing great basketball, they're very talented individually and collectively, we're going to see a great deal of pressure from them."

The Aggies are led by the freshman duo of point guard A'quonesia Franklin and forward Morenike Atunrase.

Atunrase has already set the school record for blocks in a season by a freshman with 30, and tied the school record in the Aggies' win over Oklahoma State as she sent back seven shots.

Texas A&M ranks second in blocked shots overall in the Big 12 Conference.

MLB | Pujols named the baseball man of the year

ST. LOUIS — Albert Pujols' goal for next season is a repeat of last year with a better ending.

Pujols

Pujols, who's finished no lower than third in the NL MVP balloting the last three years, was a major reason for the team's 105-win season. On Tuesday, he was named baseball man of the year for the fourth straight year by the St. Louis chapter of the Baseball Writers Association of America.

Pujols, who turned 25 on Sunday, batted .331 with 46 home runs and 123 RBIs last season, and had 51 doubles for the second straight year. He's the only player in major league history to hit 30 or more homers in his first four seasons.

MLB | Clemens asks for $22 million in arbitration

NEW YORK — Roger Clemens filed for a record $22 million in salary arbitration on Tuesday, and the Houston Astros offered the seven-time Cy Young Award winner $13.5 million.

Clemens

Until now, the highest figure ever submitted in arbitration was $18.5 million in 2001 by New York Yankees shortstop Derek Jeter, who then agreed to a $189 million, 10-year deal.

The highest salary ever earned by a pitcher in a single season was $17.5 million, last year by Boston's Pedro Martinez.

NFL | Vermeil plans no changes to defensive staff

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Chiefs might have some new faces on defense next year, but only on the field.

Vermeil

Even though the Chiefs had one of the worst defenses in the NFL this past season, coach Dick Vermeil said Monday he has no plans to replace any members of the defensive coaching staff, including secondary coach Peter Giunta and secondary assistant Vernon Dean.

Vermeil said general manager Carl Peterson has encouraged him to make some personnel changes in the secondary, where the play of safeties Greg Wesley and Jerome Woods declined and cornerbacks William Bartee and Julian Battle never proved themselves.

NBA | Kobe Bryant out at least 2 more weeks

LOS ANGELES — Lakers star Kobe Bryant will be sidelined at least two more weeks with a severely sprained right ankle.

Bryant

Team spokesman John Black said before the Lakers faced the Utah Jazz on Monday night that the NBA's second-leading scorer was examined earlier in the day by team physician Dr. Steve Lombardo and foot specialist Philip Kwong.

A CT scan confirmed there was no fracture.

NBA | Suns' Nash, backup hurt in practice incident

PHOENIX - After limping home from an 0-4 road trip, the Phoenix Suns thought they would have Steve Nash back in the lineup Wednesday night against Memphis. Then Nash had his foot stepped on in Tuesday's practice by his backup.

Nash

The bruised left thigh that sidelined Nash for the last 2 1/2 games is no longer a problem, but he twisted his back when backup point guard Leandro Barbosa stepped on his foot. Nash was in obvious discomfort after more than an hour of treatment.

Touch provides comfort, relief

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Physical touch does not have to be purely sexual.

There are many benefits linked to physical touch that can lead to better relationships, comfort, relaxation and stress relief.

Jordan Chapman, sophomore in open option, said he thinks physical touch can be as simple as bumping into someone as a part of appreciation or even simpler in giving someone a hug.

"When someone gives me a hug, it shows affection," Chapman said. "People should give more hugs because it shows that you are there for them. I'm usually happy when I receive a hug, but it all really depends on the mood I'm in at the time."

People can also benefit from touch by kissing, Chapman said.

"A kiss is a step up from a hug, and it shows more bonding," he said.

"I feel you get something more out of a kiss, such as feeling closer to that particular person."

Touch, however, is not necessarily a mutual activity, Chapman said. There has to be a sense of trust and comfort when allowing someone to touch you.

"A form of touch that signifies trust is a handshake. Sometimes handshakes can be almost an obligation," he said. "Comfort is more of a circumstantial part of touch. I think that girls are more comfortable in touch though."

Friendship is key when Amber Axelton, sophomore in psychology and anthropology, thinks about physical touch.

"There does have to be a certain degree of trust and at least a friendship," Axelton said.

"I think you have to know the person while having a good feel for them when physical touch is involved."

Hugs are also an important part of touch for Axelton.

"A hug is definitely a sign as friendship as well as showing someone they are welcome or even feeling sympathetic for them," she said.

Axelton also agrees with Chapman that a benefit of a kiss is the feeling that you are close to someone and feel attached to them. She said a kiss tells a person that you care about them and expresses your affection.

"There does need to be a sense of security with the person such as being in a relationship with them," Axelton said, "however, I feel that girls are more open than guys. It all really depends on the person."

When determining who should make the first move of a touch, Axelton said that it is usually the males.

"I prefer guys to take the initiative. I think physical touch means more for girls and are more prone to them," Axelton said.

Another positive physical touch for Axelton is a massage.

"Massages are a form of relaxation and are very soothing," Axelton said. "They feel good and relieve stress and tension."

Massages are also very important for infants as well, said Ann Murray, associate professor in family studies and human services.

"Babies can benefit from a massage by gaining weight at the infant stage," Murray said.

"There is also a form of touch for premature babies called kangaroo care that was discovered in underdeveloped countries where there was research that the babies can gain weight by this touch."

There are other factors of touch from which people can benefit.

Murray said that both infants and adults also benefit from the vocal and visual responses from the person providing the touch.

Physical touch is not practiced as much in the United States now and this could be a concern, Murray said.

"This country almost has a fear of touch," Murray said. "It seems like it has become more of an emotional problem and even unhealthy."

Hugs for all occasions

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hugs are found in many forms and shapes, but it's the meaning behind a hug that can go a long way. Here are several meanings of a couple of types of hugs that can be see in today's world.

1. Normal hug: Usually a sign of friendship or affection. The normal hug does not have much action to it, but is the most commonly used hug. Can be seen everywhere and mean almost anything.

2. Side hug: A variation of the normal hug, but is more of a mutual hug for people. It shows friendship, trust and appreciation. The side hug can also be done with multiple people such as in a group huddle, or the singing of the alma mater. Found at sporting events, family reunions and other social events involving people you know.

3. Bear hug: The bear hug is done when the emotion is more than average. It can show joy, sadness or love, as well as a goodbye and a sign of pride in someone. The bear hug can also be used to crush people as a sign of aggression. Can be seen at funerals, graduations, farewells and professional wrestling programs.

4. Hug from behind: This type of hug shows that you have trust in someone. It lets him know you love him. It can also show a sign of sympathy such as to say you are sorry. A hug from behind can additionally mean an act of surprise to someone who you care about. Can be done privately or openly, depending on the circumstance.

5. Hug and a kiss: The most affectionate type of hug shows that you truly love the person. Normally done between a couple in an array of circumstances such as goodbyes, hellos, thank you's and to say "I love you." Seen at dances, weddings, airports and in front of jealous girlfriends and boyfriends.

6. Leaping hug: Normally done by a girl leaping into a guy, this hug shows extreme happiness. It can show that you miss someone so much that you have to jump into them. The leaping hug is also a sign of welcome. Can occur in airports, at parties and in cheesy romantic movies.

5th year gives advice on lost cell phones, dead-beat boyfriends

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: My friend has trouble with "misplacing" her cell phone when at the bars. She's been kicked off insurance twice and has a ridiculous running total of four lost phones. It's not unusual for them to turn up at places such as Village Inn and Sonic on occasion. Do you have any advice for her as to how to avoid these detrimental mistakes?

A: I'm glad you asked this question. I've been on a personal quest to eliminate the risk of losing a valuable cell phone.

One idea is to attach your phone to the key ring on one of those custodian style key rings that zip out and back in. That way you can grab it from your belt, talk, and then simply drop your phone and it will snap back to your waist. Another idea is to rig one of those spring loaded wrist holsters that you see gun slingers in the movies use to hide guns under their sleeves.

Flick your wrist once and your phone is at your fingertips. Flick your wrist again and it disappears under your sleeve. These ideas are still just in the development phase, and there are more to come. If these ideas don't suit your friend, I suggest that she stop being a drunken idiot. The fact that she ends up at Sonic and Village Inn after the bars may mean that some behavioral changes are in order anyway.

Q: I've recently been seeing a guy for the last six weeks. He tells me that he likes me a lot but that he can't fully commit to a relationship. I can't understand him. What should I do?

A: Let me try to explain to you how this guy is probably feeling. Imagine for a moment that you are broke and starving. You haven't eaten in days.

You are walking down the sidewalk one day when you look down and find a one hundred dollar bill. You are now ecstatic as you will head towards McDonalds to buy the biggest value meal and super-size it.

On the way there you stumble upon another one hundred dollar bill lying on the sidewalk.

Would you pick it up or simply leave it because you already have a hundred dollars?

This is how some men – and women – feel about the opposite sex.

If this guy can't give you the respect you deserve by being faithful to you, dump him.

Don't let him have that kind of power in your relationship. And if you need any help getting over him, meet me at So Long Saloon at 1:45 a.m. Saturday.

Name: Ralph Richardson

Title: Dean of College of Vet Med

How many years at K-State: Six and a half years since returning to K-State as Dean of the Veterinary College. I grew up in Manhattan and lived here from 1951 and 1970 while I attended undergraduate and veterinary school.

Favorite leisure activity: Time with my family and working with my bird dogs.

Three adjectives that describe you: Optimistic, optimistic, optimistic.

Describe an ideal night for you: Getting home at a reasonable hour, spending the evening with my wife, and getting more than five hours of sleep.

Favorite aspect of K-State: The "can do" approach to important issues.

If you could change something about K-State, what would it be? Better funding, more diversity and a greater sense of our impact on national and international issues.

Most embarrassing moment in college? Forgetting to attend the pre-veterinary club meeting where I was being voted on for president. They elected me anyway.

What is your favorite alcoholic beverage? I'm not much of a drinker. I probably enjoy a Diet Coke about as much as anything.

If you could drive any car, what would it be? An SUV

If you could have lunch with anyone, who would it be? My wife

Something students don't know about you: When I was in college I lived in one of the apartments in K-State's Purebred Beef Barn.

Bakery Science Club offers sweet deal

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Rachelle Miller, Amanda Lindahl and Megan Leonard, all freshman in bakery science and members of bakery science club, crush sugar Tuesday evening at Shellenberger Hall. The club made cookies and bread to sell for their bake sale from 3-5 p.m. today in Shellenberger Hall.

Bake sale profits send students to national conventions

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The aroma of fresh-baked cookies and breads will greet those who walk by the bakery science lab in Shellenberger Hall.

The Bakery Science Club bakes these foods every Tuesday from 5 to 9 p.m. in preparation for their bake sale every Wednesday from 3 to 5 p.m. on the first floor of Shellenberger Hall.

Marvin Willyard, adviser, said most of the ingredients are donated by baking and allied companies.

These donations help the students in the club increase profits to fund trips to national conventions, paying for hotel and air fare.

"The bake sale pays for most of the students' expenses," Willyard said. "They allow the students to meet people in the industry and create opportunities through contacts for jobs."

John MacKay, graduate student in electrical engineering, said he bought cookies because of the amount of food and the cheap price.

"There were a lot of cookies there at the time," MacKay said. "It seemed like a good deal to buy a dozen cookies and they were only $2.50."

MacKay said he plans on buying cookies from the bake sale in the future because it helps the club's funds.

"It helped a club at K-State provide a worthwhile service to the public," MacKay said.

Brook Carson, Bakery Science Club president, said she hopes word of the sales will spread around campus.

"I think it is important for the people here at K-State to support others at K-State, whether it is supporting the bake sales or pottery sales or whatever else students sell here on campus," she said.

Along with the weekly bake sale and national conventions, the club has an open house in the spring as well as a dinner at the end of each semester to honor the graduating seniors.

"During the open house we will sell a range of products from chocolate chip cookies to focaccia bread and danishes," Carson said.

The Bakery Science program began in 1963 where it was evolved from a similar program in Florida.

"The Bakery Science program is primarily an opportunity for students to get to know each other and to produce and sell products to fund a trip to national baking conventions and learn more about their field of interest," he said.

Willyard said a student does not have to be a bakery science major to join the club and he encourages students to become members.

"Probably not far from half of the students are not bakery science majors," Willyard said.

Carson said she joined the Bakery Science Club because she wanted to get to know people who were in the same field of study as her.

"When I was a freshman, I really did not know what I was getting into," Carson said.

"I joined to get to know the people in my department and a learn a little about my major."

New policy widens course selection

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Faculty Senate approved a new policy at its meeting Tuesday that will allow students to take more advanced classes.

The policy allows students at K-State to enroll in a wider variety of upper-division undergraduate courses for general education credit.

This was a concern because students have complained about the lack of selection for upper-level UGE requirements.

Faculty Senate also passed new legislation that would allow each college to specify which upper-level, major-specific classes would fill the required credits.

If the policy is accepted by each college, it would provide three of the six upper-level hours required for graduation.

Faculty Senate President and Associate Professor of Secondary Education Jackie Spears said the new policy helps students.

"It will make it easier for students to meet general requirements," she said.

Steve Eckels, associate professor in mechanical and nuclear engineering, said he favored the policy.

"I would favor any policy that adds flexibility," he said.

Other issues addressed at the meeting included the increased workload for K-State's professors.

The Faculty Senate reviewed a 2004 report that showed between 1986 and 2004, professors have experienced a 26 percent increase in the number of students in the classroom and the excess often fall to graduate teaching assistants and instructors who don't hold the title of professor.

SPYWARE | Knowledge best defense against spyware

Free downloads especially list by getting a virus, which can leave spyware in the licensing agreement, so users agree to it without knowing if they don't read the agreement, he said.

Another way to get spyware is by getting a virus, which can leave spyware on a computer.

David Manowski, micro-computer support technician, performed an experiment where he used a new computer with no spyware and visited Web sites that are common among college students.

He downloaded programs students would download including the peer to peer network, KaZaA.

After installing the free version, he said the program used up to 60 percent CPU usage.

Manowski said the amount was surprising.

"Just the fact that it took 60 percent of the CPU, that makes it extremely possessive," he said. "I was surprised at the volitility of the programs. They are hard to get rid of."

By the end of the experiment Ramsey said Manowski had reached 100 percent CPU usage after visiting only a few Web sites. The spyware that was downloaded was so difficult to eliminate, Manowski had to reformat the computer.

PREVENTION

The best way to prevent spyware is to avoid visiting random Web sites, Ramsey said.

"Don't follow links that you don't know," he said.

Ramsey said it is also important to keep up-to-date on a browser's security patches.

"Windows Update is your best friend when you turn on the automated updates," he said.

Downloading software should be avoided unless it is necessary, Ramsey said.

"Don't download and install software unless you really really need it," he said. "You might check the fine print and do a web search for the software to see reviews from others."

ELIMINATION

There is no one tool that eliminates all spyware, Ramsey said. However, there are several options that can eliminate most, if not all spyware when used in combination with each other.

Microsoft Windows AntiSpyware is a spyware removal program that has been newly introduced.

Ramsey said so far the program works well.

Other programs to remove spyware include AdAware and Spybot Search and Destroy, he said.

"Sometimes you have to install both programs, because one of them will do a really good job getting one kind of software and the other one, not so hot," Ramsey said.

Users can download the programs to delete spyware from the Internet or pick up a free Cat Pack CD in the Union Computer Store or on the third floor of Hale Library.

The Cat Pack contains patches, antivirus sofware, a web browser and Spybot Search and Destroy.

If all of the spyware is not eliminated with the programs, it may be necessary to call the Information Technology Assistance Center for help, Anthony Cobb, help desk coordinator, said.

Ramsey said above all it is important for students to be aware of what is going on with their computer.

"On today's Internet, it's really up to each student to arm themselves with the knowledge and the tools to protect themselves," he said.

"The fact is that this stuff is out there, and it's affecting people."

TENNIS | Season begins Saturday against Drake

"Well, it would be a good finish to my career," she said. "I haven't really paid attention to it or anything until this year, when people started bringing it to my attention that I was actually in the run for that."

Kvaratskhelia, one of the top freshmen in the Big 12 during the fall season, returns to the court after a breakout fall which included her first singles title at the Ole Miss Classic in September.

Kvaratskhelia said she was pleased with her play this fall.

"I was working really hard to get this result, and I'm really excited about it," she said. "I worked really hard, and I'm glad that I am here."

This spring, Bietau said he would like to see Kvaratskhelia and rest of the Wildcats get back to where they typically finish in the conference.

"We had a string of five years in the top half of the Big 12, and that was broken last year," he said.

"That would certainly be one of our goals – to get back in the top half of the conference."

The spring season begins at noon Saturday against Drake at the Cottonwood Racquet Club in Manhattan.

BASKETBALL

Wildcat men take week off, prepare for Texas A&M

That effort, Wooldridge said, proved the importance of defensive intensity in picking up conference wins.

In the Wildcats previous two outings against Nebraska and Texas Tech, offense was not a problem, as the team connected on 53.5 percent of its shots and hit 23-of-37 three-point attempts.

But defense was an issue – the Cornhuskers beat K-State on the boards 39-33, and the Wildcats gave up 13 offensive rebounds to the Red Raiders – and K-State came out on the losing end.

Wooldridge said the Missouri game provided a teaching point for his team – that being sound defensively is key, especially when things on the offensive end are not going as well.

"What we can show them is you did control a lot of things in that 'blue-collar category,'" Wooldridge said.

Fans will see if the Wildcats can continue their "blue-collar" attitude on Saturday, as the team travels to College Station, Texas to face the Texas A&M Aggies (12-2, 1-2).

Massey, who scored 17 points against Missouri, said he was not going to get caught up in the glory of last Saturday's win.

"It really means nothing, it's just one win," Massey said.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Jeremiah Massey goes up for a block against Missouri's Kalen Grimes during the second half Saturday evening. The Wildcats look to even up their season record when they take on Texas A&M Saturday.

TEXAS A&M | Wecker closes in on 2,000 points

Conference freshman leader in assists with four per game and she knocked down the winning shot with 1.8 seconds remaining to beat Kansas, Saturday.

The Aggies are first overall in the Big 12 Conference with 16 offensive rebounds per game, while the Wildcats are second with nearly 15 per game overall.

Freshman forward Shana Wheeler said K-State will need to execute on the fundamentals against Texas A&M.

"We're definitely concentrating on boxing out a lot more in practice, because they're very athletic and they go to the boards hard," Wheeler said.

K-State has won 20 straight Big 12 Conference games at Bramlage Coliseum, including three conference home games this year, each by double figures.

"Every team loves to play at home, but I think it's been fortunate for us that we get the crowds that we do," senior forward Kendra Wecker said.

Wecker is just 19 points shy of reaching 2,000 points in her career. She is averaging a Big 12 leading 21.4 points per game this season.

COMMISSION | New housing units approved

The development could possibly be funded by a state program. In this arrangement, the city would maintain ownership of the land.

James Moore, of R&J Investment Group, presented the proposal to the commissioners.

"A tremendous need exists for housing, compounded by the return of Fort Riley soldiers," Moore said.

Developers hope to build five buildings with eight units each. Moore estimates that there will be $4 million in total costs.

The Commission supported the proposal, because it is a smaller development and doesn't destroy existing structures.

Technology upgrade

- A technology upgrade costing $35,000 was passed so the city's finance department can buy new software. Bernie Hayen, Director of Finance, reported that its current software is more than 20 years old. The Commission approved the motion 5-0.

Presidential inauguration at noon today

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

George W. Bush will be sworn into his second term as president at noon today in Washington D.C.

Bush will place his hand on the same Bible that President George Washington used in 1789.

A parade of thousands, fireworks and a luncheon will highlight the 55th presidential inauguration.

"With the campaign behind us, Americans lift up our sights to the years ahead and to the great goals we will achieve for our country. I am eager and ready for the work ahead," Bush said on Wednesday.

The inauguration will be aired on CBS, NBC and ABC beginning at 9 a.m.

How much?
The cost of a presidential oath

- More than $40 million will be spent on the inauguration festivities including balls, parades and fireworks. The money is raised by a committee that collects donations from wealthy individuals and corporate sponsors.
- The only Kansas company contributing a six figure donation to the inauguration was the Burlington Northern and Santa Fe Railroad Company in Topeka with $250,000.
- Washington D.C. mayor Anthony Williams estimated it will cost the district $17.3 million, which includes 6,000 law enforcement officials and 2,500 military personnel.
- For the security costs, $5.4 million comes from a D.C. special events fund. The other $11.9 million will come from the city's homeland security budget.
- $5.3 million of the total expense will go to overtime hours for police officers, while $2.9 million will cover transportation, lodging, meals, water and granola bars.
- $2.8 million will be spent by the architect of the U.S. Capitol to spruce up the front of the building.
- The Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies will spend $1.25 million to handle printing, catering and flowers for the luncheon after the oath.
- Bleacher seats for the parade cost $15, $60 and $125 each. A ticket to an inaugural ball is $150.
- Fort Riley's Commanding General's Mounted Color Guard will make its second consecutive appearance in the Presidential Inaugural Parade today.

Did you know?
Inauguration Day

- The oath reads: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United State." It appears in Article II of the Constitution.
- George Washington set the precedent of kissing the Bible after the oath.
- Jan. 20 has been Inauguration Day since 1933, when the date was written into the 20th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Before that amendment was passed, presidential inaugurations were held in March.
- Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist will swear in Bush despite missing oral arguments all week because of his thyroid cancer. Speaker of the House Dennis Hastert is swearing in Vice President Dick Cheney.
- The presidential parade will lead a parade of 10,000 people back to the White House after a formal lunch with members of Congress.
- There will be nine official balls and nearly twice as many unofficial parties.
- On Wednesday, the Texas State Society's Black and Boots Ball honored the president. More than 21,000 enchiladas and 3,500 lbs. of beef barbeque were prepared.
- The Washington Fairmont Hotel is offering a $10,000 package with two actors pretending to be your very own secret service agents. For $200,500, the Mandarin Oriental Hotel offers a private jet service and champagne and caviar served nightly.

Campus fundraising efforts benefit tsunami victims

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wearing a green ribbon could help others halfway around the world.

Various student organizations are selling ribbons and souvenirs and collecting donations to help tsunami victims in South Asia.

South Asian Student Organizations have been selling ribbons and souvenirs from the disaster area in the K-State Student Union throughout the week. Information pamphlets giving details about the disaster will also be distributed. The proceeds go to Tsunami Relief and Rehabilitation Fundraiser out of Albert Lea, Minn.

The KSU Cheer Squad, in accordance with the American Red Cross, is also raising funds in the Union to support workers and victims in the disaster areas.

Due to the high cost of shipping, the American Red Cross is only taking monetary donations, said Jason Lantz, director of operations at the Manhattan chapter, said.

"The donations we receive can be put to better use if we buy goods on-site, because it is more economical that way," he said.

Mary Siegle, a senior administrative assistant in the English department, donates money to the KSU Cheer Squad to help the tsunami relief effort. The cheer squad will have its table from 10 a.m. - 2 p.m. until Friday in the K-State Student Union and will donate the money received to the American Red Cross.

Laura Jones, cheerleader and senior in French and business, said she felt a need to get a fundraiser going as soon as she heard about the events over winter break.

School board approves plan to increase city sales tax

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

School board members voted Wednesday to send a proposal to increase the sales tax by .25 percent.

If the initiative is approved by the City Commission, it would raise the sales tax beginning Oct. 1 and ending Sept. 30, 2008.

If passed by the commission, the initiative would go on the April 5 ballot.

At a time when the Kansas Supreme Court ruled Kansas schools are drastically underfunded and set a deadline for legislators to fix the problem, USD 383 is facing almost $2 million in budget cuts. The funds from the tax increase could go to help facilitate several different aspects of running the district.

Board members expressed concern that the income, which Associate Superintendent Robert Seymour said works much like a grant, would create administrative nightmares for district employees who would be required to track how the money was spent.

Director of Business Services Bruce Stiles said he was confident that while it was true the program would create more work for the administration, it was something that could be done.

Board member Randy Martin said he was originally opposed to the idea, but that the proposal that was presented Wednesday satisfied his concerns.

Board members decided to take "supporting local schools" out of a list of possible expenditures the money could be used for, saying it might create confusion amongst the public.

On Nov. 17, the board approved a request to develop an agreement with the City of Manhattan. Two board members were appointed to serve on a committee to consider the matter.

The agreement presented Wednesday was agreed to in a joint work session between the board and City Commission on Jan. 11.

Seymour said the tax could be

Manhattan businesses report vandalism

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Several buildings and other property in the Manhattan area were vandalized with spray paint Tuesday night or Wednesday morning.

Damages from the incidents reported so far have totaled $1,650, said Riley County Police Lt. Kurt Moldrup.

"There is no indication as of yet it is gang-related," Moldrup said.

He said four incidents have been reported.

UMB Bank employees reported damage to the west side of the building at 529 Humboldt St. totaling $500.

Employees at the Flint Hills Breadbasket, 905 Yuma, reported damage totaling $1,000 to a 1995 Ford box truck.

Manhattan Mercury employees, 318 N. 5th St., reported damage to the building's east wall totaling $50.

Workers at Manhattan High East Campus reported damage to the building totaling $500.

Moldrup said the incidents were believed to be related because at each location, the suspect or suspects spray painted the words "Thug Life" and "South Side" on the property.

There are no suspects at this time.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Panel confirms Rice
The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted Wednesday to confirm Condoleezza Rice as secretary of state after two days of hearings in which she faced strenuous Democratic assaults on Bush's handling of Iraq. Rice would be the first black woman to hold the job if the Senate confirms her nomination.

Japan warns of tsunami
Japan issued a tsunami warning Wednesday after a strong earthquake struck off its coast, the first such warning since last month's tsunami disaster in southern Asia. But, officials were quick to reassure residents the wave was small. Indonesia increased the countries' death approximation by 50,000.

Marriage amendment
The Louisiana Supreme Court on Wednesday reinstated an anti-gay marriage amendment to the state constitution. The court reversed a state district judge's October ruling striking down the amendment on the grounds that it violated a provision of the state constitution requiring that an amendment cover only one subject.

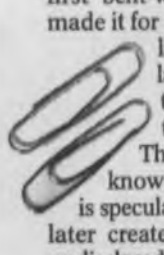
DIVERSIONS

A WASTE OF TIME — BUT HEY, IT'S BETTER THAN LECTURE



Who invented that?

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Want to know where some of the most common items came from? Take a few minutes to find out more.

PAPERCLIPS

In 1867, Samuel B. Fay patented the first bent-wire paperclip. He originally made it for attaching tickets to fabric, but later realized it was a spectacular device for attaching papers to one another, not to mention the perfect name.

The paperclip form that most know now was patented in 1899. It is speculated that paperclip jewelry was later created by some bored kid at an undisclosed office in the mid-70s.

TOILET PAPER

The first rolls of toilet paper were produced in 1391 by the Chinese for Chinese Emperors – which gives a new meaning to the porcelain "throne." However, the first U.S. toilet paper was created by New Yorker Joseph C. Gayetty in 1857. Rumors that the Civil War started because Jefferson Davis used the last "square" still plague many historians to this day.

POST-IT NOTES

Dr. Spencer Silver was working on a strong adhesive in a 3M laboratory in 1970. However, Silver didn't create a super-strong adhesive; he created a very weak one. Even though no one knew what to do with the stuff, Silver stuck by his adhesive.

Four years later, one of Silver's colleagues needed something to stick some notes to a choir book, and Silver tried using his adhesive on smaller pieces of paper.

3M later developed the adhesive and distributed Post-it Notes nationwide in 1980. Note to self: Don't discard any future adhesive concoctions.

LIGHT BULBS

Lamps have been used for thousands of years, typically using fire. The first electric arc lamp was used in 1801 by Sir Humphry Davy of England.

Thomas A. Edison of the United States later invented the first commercially successful incandescent lamp in 1879. Friedrich Meyer, Hans Spanner and Edmund Germer patented a fluorescent lamp in 1927, and it's been sucking the blood out of the eyeballs of office workers ever since.

inventors.about.com/library/inventors/blilight2.htm

ZIPPER

Elias Howe, inventor of the sewing machine, received a patent in 1851 for an "automatic, continuous closing device" that would have given him the moniker of "Father of the Zipper." However, he didn't develop it.

Swedish immigrant and electrical engineer Gideon Sundback was hired to work for the Universal Fastener Company, the company that took Howe's concept of the zipper and developed it, and in 1913, Sundback developed the design for the modern zipper.

Q-TIPS

In 1923, Leo Gerstenzang saw his wife apply wads of cotton to toothpicks. He quickly realized the marketplace for manufacturing a ready-to-use cotton swab.

He founded the Leo Gerstenzang Infant Novelty Co., which created baby care products.

Originally they were called Baby Gays, and in 1926, the labels were changed to read Q-tips Baby Gays. Later Baby Gays was discarded and Q-tips became the identifying mark for cotton swabs.

The Q in Q-tips stands for quality, and the word describes the cotton at the end of the stick. Reading this information while firmly applying a Q-tip up the nose and against the brain makes it more interesting.

Source: www.qtips.com/history.html

CONDOMS

Condoms have been used for thousands of years. They've been traced back to about 1000 B.C., when the Egyptians used a linen sheath for protection against disease.

The first spermicides were used with condoms in the 1500s.

In 1861, the first advertisement for a condom in America ran in the New York Times for "Dr. Power's French Preventatives."

Rubber was used to make condoms in the 1800s and into the early 20th century, until latex was used and aged better than the old rubber-type.

Howie Mandell later made the condom popular by pulling it over his head and blowing it up with his nose on "Family Guy."

All-Star Players grill opens with chicken, Greek menu

Union managers hope restaurant will bring in more profits

By Andrew Leslie
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Free fries, all around.

Students were treated to free fries with the opening of a new restaurant in the K-State Student Union Wednesday.

All-Star Players Wildcat Grill opened Wednesday in the Union replacing Mean Gene's Burgers.

"I think they just wanted to get a different kind of hamburger," said Peggy Hayes, manager.

Tina Griffin, food service director for the Union, said Mean Gene's hamburger sales were not very high. However, in most food courts, hamburgers are top selling item.

Wildcat Grill offers a wider variety than its predecessor. Along with single and double hamburgers, they offer mushroom, bacon and swiss hamburgers, low carbohydrate alternatives and a $.99 small hamburger. All of the food is freshly made, even the special sauce that they put on the hamburgers, Hayes said.

They also offer a menu with a golf theme that features chicken dishes.

Mike Vott, junior in history, said he likes the additional chicken menu.

"The chicken wings here are good. They taste like the ones in Aggieville, and most burger places don't have that," he said.

The side items, or "Halftime favorites" menu, consists of cheese fries and onion rings.

"The fries are delicious. They have a good, old-fashioned taste," said Stephen Johnson, junior in history.

The Wildcat Grill features Greek food as well. Their "Odyssey Games" menu features wraps, greek salad, garlic hummus, pita and gyros.

"I think the gyros will go over really well, once the students hear about them," Hayes said.

Unlike Mean Gene's, there are no franchise fees involved with the Wildcat Grill, Griffin said. Since the Union doesn't have to pay additional fees, there shouldn't be an increase in prices, she said.

The Wildcat Grill is decorated with pictures of Willie the Wildcat, a basketball hoop, K-State jerseys and a television showing K-State sports. A few of the employees also wear whistles around their necks to draw attention to the restaurant.

"The decor captures the Wildcat spirit as we look forward to another winning basketball and football season," Johnson said.

Hayes said students appeared to like The Wildcat Grill the day before the opening when it gave away free samples.

Hayes said she hopes students will continue to like the restaurant throughout the year.

One student said this won't be a problem.

"Overall, All Star Players is an all-star choice," Johnson said.

Michael McFadden, sophomore in marketing, takes a bite of the hamburger he purchased from the All-Star Players Wildcat Grill, which replaced Mean Gene's. The restaurant also offers chicken strips, wings and onion rings as well as a Greek menu.

City sales tax unfair, but necessary for quality education

The sales tax that will raise money for Manhattan schools, while unfair, is necessary for ensuring quality education.

The Manhattan-Ogden School Board will send a proposal to the City Commission to institute a 0.25-percent sales tax to support the district's budget, which is facing a $2 million cut.

USD 383 stretches outside the city limit, but most families shop in Manhattan. The tax does put an unfair tax burden on K-State students – most of whom do not have children in the school system.

However, quality Manhattan schools mean good professors with families will stay at K-State.

Quality education means a better state and country in the future.

Just as students are urged to care about the place they live for four years and vote in local elections, the same applies for the school district.

There is no doubt the state should be providing more adequate funding for K-12 education.

However, the quality of education is at risk and the state has found no solution for its funding woes.

The sales tax could save art, music or foreign language programs that are necessary to educate well-rounded Kansans.

Nobody wants to pay more money, but when it funds education, it's always worth it.

Fourum talk

Interview with Campus Fourum reveals hypocritical nature, humor

Last Monday, I conducted an interview with everyone's favorite Collegian feature, the Fourum.

GRANT REICHERT

Me: First off, how about a sample of your work for people not familiar with it?

Fourum: Sure. To the guy who almost hit me on his bike, I'm going to track you down and shove a friggin' shiv in your eye.

Me: Whoa man, you probably shouldn't say stuff like that.

Fourum: I'm the Fourum! I shall say whatever I please. Freedom of speech, etc...

Me: Just tone it down a bit. How about a pillow instead of a shiv? And instead of shoving, maybe you could just kind of "insert"?

Fourum: That's the worst idea I've heard. I would stab you, were there not so much anti-stab legislation violating our 16th Amendment rights.

Me: That's not what the 16th Amendment is about at all.

Fourum: Yeah, then what is it about?

Me: Um... is that the one that allows men to wear women's underwear?

Fourum: What? Is that even a constitutional right?

Me: I would hate to live in a country where it wasn't. Anyway, you've shown some antipathy toward Johnson County residents. Why? They're people, just like you and me – except, of course, for being richer, better looking and generally more fun to be around.

Fourum: I actually grew up in Johnson County, and everyone there used to make fun of me. My mom said they were just jealous that I had such a hot mom. She also said I was fat.

Me: That's tough. Oh, and I'll need your mom's phone number to, uh, verify that attribution. Are we talking "girl next door" hotness or "forbidden fruit" hotness?

Fourum: Dude, that's my mom we're talking about.

Me: Understood. "Forbidden fruit" it is. So, how do you stay so consistently original and funny?

Fourum: Oh, just a good work ethic. Eat green vegetables. Pray every day. And acid. Lots of acid. I dropped a tab just this morning, and, man! I was writing in six dimensions for awhile. Jim Morrison was in one of them, and he was, like, speaking Navajo or something, which, although hard to understand, was still freakin' mind-bending.

Me: This explains why your writing is so schizoid. You're a Republican one second and a Democrat the next. Like John McCain, but more mentally sound.

Fourum: Me, schizoid? Dude, your writing is like stream-of-consciousness logorrhea that at no time coalesces into a coherent point. That's schizoid. Oh, and by the way, I want to bear your children.

Me: Which brings me to my next question: are you a male or a female?

Fourum: Well... how to put this? I'm kind of like God.

Me: So you're a male.

Fourum: How do you know God's a male? That's sexist.

Me: C'mon. White beard, booming voice, created the world in seven days... he's a man.

Fourum: That's not God. I think you're thinking to Bob Vila. Are you thinking of Bob Vila?

Me: Listen, who's doing this interview anyway?

Fourum: Bush lied.

Me: What?

Fourum: I'm sorry; I got excited when you started yelling. You got a paper sack or something? I'm hyperventilating here.

Me: Yeah, but I was planning to recycle it later.

Fourum: That's all right; I'll just lie down for a bit.

Me: Not on my floor. You smell like a computer science major. And when's the last time you changed that shirt?

Fourum: I'm not wearing a shirt.

Me: Get out.

Fourum: No one tells the Fourum what to do! No one!

Me: Hey! look over there – a sprinkler is inadvertently hitting the sidewalk, thus wasting water.

Fourum: Where? Hey there's no – where are you going? Come back here!

Jackass comedy: the dumbing down of America's humor

We need to put "Jackass" back on the air.

I know many people disliked "Jackass" because a few fans tried to imitate stunts like the human barbecue.

AARON DUNCAN

Like the man in Texas who attempted that stunt but unfortunately forgot to duplicate one import element. Whereas "Jackass" star Johnny Knoxville wore a flame-retardant suit when he preformed the stunt, this guy wore a loose-fitting T-shirt and a pair of jeans.

Shockingly, the 100-percent cotton T-shirt was not flame retardant. More shockingly, the guy survived the stunt.

I think "Jackass" should be put back on the air purely for its evolutionary purposes, so that its fans can systematically weed themselves out of our gene pool. Let's face it: this guy from Texas wasn't going to cure cancer and probably had only a rudimentary grasp of the English language, which I guess in Texas means he can still be governor or even president.

No, I miss the program because it was straightforward about its subject matter. Considering what passes for comedy today, I think "Jackass" is Emmy material. More and more what we find funny is the gross, disgusting or just plain dumb. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution of April 5, 2002, reported that we are living in the golden age of dumb comedy.

Whether it's Mike Myers playing Fat Bastard, Jim Carrey talking out of his bum, or Ben Stiller being a total Focker, the only thing Americans want to laugh at these days is a bunch of jackasses. That's right, America, we've become a culture where the highest form of humor is jackass comedy.

The rise in low-brow comedy may not seem like a problem to some people, but we need to remember humor is a powerful tool that can critique society and promote change when used wisely. The situation has become so bad that in his 2001 book, "The Death of Comedy," author Erich Segal proclaims the death of comedy (hope I didn't ruin the ending for you). Segal contends that low-level comedy pervades every aspect of our media.

Blaming the media would be easy, but the media aren't to blame. People are. Why? Because they are fascinated with morons. As written in the previously Atlanta Journal-Constitution article, Robert Thompson of Syracuse University believes, "Americans have a general affection for dumbness, like the Hawaiian Punch guy who keeps getting punched in the face."

The insightful wit of Samuel Clemens, Alan Alda and Jerry Seinfeld has been replaced by cheap jokes about Ben Stiller's bodily functions. Cultural critics refer to this as the "George W. Bushing" of America, leading to a whole array of comics and humorists who think the term ironic refers to something completely made of iron.

Unfortunately, we have to do something about this problem.

My original plan was just to wait for Neil Postman to write a book on the subject – and if you don't get that joke, you are part of the problem. But, considering that he died last year, a new book seems unlikely, so I'll have to handle things.

First, we need to support the still intelligent sources of humor that are out there.

The Fox Network has this year's Emmy winner for the best comedy: "Arrested Development," a show with inspiringly clever humor and depressingly low ratings.

Also, try watching or reading anything by Jon Stewart. This guy is so funny, he made "Crossfire" interesting.

Finally, remember we live in a consumer-driven, capitalist culture, which means the solution is ultimately in each of our hands.

The sooner we stop consuming meaningless humor the better. Playwright George Bernard Shaw set the standard for what comedy should be about when he wrote,

"Get your audience laughing and when their mouths are open slip the truth in."

Ebony Theatre remembers King with performance of slave narratives

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Their costumes are all black and the set follows the same simple style.

That's because they want their audience to focus on their words, not costumes and stage design.

Six actors from Ebony Theatre Company will be presenting "In Their Own Words," an hour-long production of slave narratives, for the Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week dinner theater sponsored by K-State's Ebony Theatre and Office of Diversity and Dual Career Development.

"The reason why we chose to do slave narratives is not to rebuild segregation, but to emphasize that it's a progressive thing," said Candace Feldman, junior in theater and director of the performance.

"The more you remember about things, the more you work toward something."

Feldman said the production will include three men and three women reading a number of different narratives found at Hale Library and on the Internet. Overall, the group looked at more than 2,100 passages from various slaves before making their final decisions for the performance.

All of the actors will be reading the passages in the slaves' own words, hence the title of the production comes, Feldman said.

The passages will cover a variety of issues, focusing on the treatment of slaves.

Nathan Jackson, K-State alumnus and actor in the performance, said Ebony Theatre members wanted to do something with Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week for a long time, but in past years, students have been out of town.

This year, however, the group jumped at the opportunity to perform – especially when he and Feldman decided to perform slave readings, Jackson said.

"I read some when I was in an African American class, and since then, I've been really drawn to them," Jackson said.

"A lot of people already know about slavery, but it's a different thing to hear it from the mouths of people who actually experienced it.

"These women and men for a long time didn't even want to speak about it, so when they got the opportunity, they wrote. It's really passionate and really honest."

Fellow actor and Ebony Theatre member Tim Taylor said he agreed.

"A lot of people, including myself, say slavery is bad, but you really don't know what happened," Taylor, junior in theater, said.

"These are real people with real words. You think you know, but you really don't."

Taylor said he has about seven different roles in the production, but overall it's not about the characters, it's about their words.

So far, Feldman said, about 150 reservations have been made, with the majority consisting of K-State administration and faculty – an audience, she said, that she hopes will see the overall message.

"It's to show victory and uniting and going forward and moving toward a common goal," Feldman said.

"It's about a common race that makes us not individuals, but a group working cooperatively together."

If you go

Dinner theater

What: Ebony Theatre's production "In Their Own Words"

When: 7-11 p.m. Friday, including dinner and dance by Mambo World Jazz

Where: K-State Student Union, Grand Ballroom

How much: $20 per person with reservations required and semi-formal attire.

Did you know?

A brief history of Ebony Theatre Company

- Ebony Theatre was started in 1976 by minority actors who couldn't get roles in main stage productions because of social issues. The group came up with their own theater that performs productions written by African American playwrights.
- Ebony Theatre sponsors a number of programs throughout the year, including poetry slams, slave narratives and a main stage performance in February to celebrate Black History Month.

Chantel Green, senior in theater, sings during the end of a rehearsal production of "In Their Own Words" Wednesday evening in the Grand Ballroom at the K-State Student Union. The production focuses on slave narratives found on the Internet and at Hale Library.

Chantel Green, senior in theater, performs at rehearsal during the beginning of the production "In Their Own Words" as Nathan Louis Jackson, senior in speech, looks on. The production is part of the Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week. A dinner and dance will also be part of the evening's activities from 7 to 11 Friday at the Grand Ballroom in the K-State Student Union.

Oral sex poses STD risks; protection needed

LACEY STORER

A few weeks ago, my friend Lindsay had an unexpected visitor.

Knocking at her door was a guy she had met at the bars and gone home with the night before. She was surprised to see him, since they hadn't even exchanged phone numbers, but she was even more surprised by what he had come to ask her.

The guy had stopped by to ask Lindsay if she had anything – sexually transmitted disease-wise.

Apparently his mouth was feeling a bit sore and he thought he'd seen some bumps under his tongue. He wondered if maybe besides giving him a good time, perhaps Lindsay had given him something else.

Luckily, Lindsay had been tested a month or so before and was clean, but she was still a bit shaken. Even though Lindsay hadn't slept with the guy, the threat of a sexually transmitted disease had still been present.

A lot of people think that if they refrain from sleeping with someone and do "everything but," then they'll be safe from catching any nasty diseases.

But the truth is doing "everything but" can be anything but safe.

Since most people don't consider oral sex to be actual sex, they don't usually think of the risks involved.

The fact is, any STD that can be transmitted via sexual intercourse and oral sex.

Chlamydia, gonorrhea, herpes – these are all things you can get when you're getting some. Having unprotected oral sex is just as dangerous as having unprotected intercourse – minus the pregnancy issue, of course.

Unfortunately, most people don't think about protecting themselves if they're not having sex. Whether they think an STD is something that won't happen to them or it's something they just don't think about, not many people are worrying about oral sex and STDs.

In a recent survey conducted by the American Social Health Association, a whopping 91 percent of young Americans admitted to not using protection during oral sex.

Carol Kennedy, director of health promotion at Lafene Health Center, said the only way to ensure that you don't get something while you're giving something is to use protection.

When receiving a blow job, guys should wear a condom (remember, they do come in flavors).

When girls are receiving oral sex, they should wear a dental dam, a rectangular piece of latex that is placed over the vaginal opening and clitoris.

Dental dams aren't as common as condoms, but they can be found at some drug stores. You can also make a do-it-yourself dental dam out of a condom.

Now, I know, nobody reading this is thinking that oral sex + protection = fun.

But if you're not sure about how clean the person you're getting busy with is, this is one way to guarantee that you will stay STD-free, besides abstaining from oral sex altogether.

After all, isn't protected oral sex better than a mouthful of STDs?

No, I miss the program because it was straightforward about its subject matter. Considering what passes for comedy today, I think "Jackass" is Emmy material. More and more what we find funny is the gross, disgusting or just plain dumb. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution of April 5, 2002, reported that we are living in the golden age of dumb comedy.

Whether it's Mike Myers playing Fat Bastard, Jim Carrey talking out of his bum, or Ben Stiller being a total Focker, the only thing Americans want to laugh at these days is a bunch of jackasses. That's right, America, we've become a culture where the highest form of humor is jackass comedy.

The rise in low-brow comedy may not seem like a problem to some people, but we need to remember humor is a powerful tool that can critique society and promote change when used wisely. The situation has become so bad that in his 2001 book, "The Death of Comedy," author Erich Segal proclaims the death of comedy (hope I didn't ruin the ending for you). Segal contends that low-level comedy pervades every aspect of our media.
